No Cake Is Baked On This Birthday

Next Monday is a birthday for which nobody will bake any cakes. On February 25, 44 years ago, the federal government was authorized the power to levy an income tax on individuals. It was left at the time that rates could never reach 10%.

The first year of the tax total corporate and individual income levies brought the government $80 million. Dividing this by the population of 1913 shows that the per capita tax bite was 82 cents.

By contrast, in 1956—two world wars and a police action later—the income tax brought the federal government $55 billion. This is a per capita tax bite of $328.

Per capita annual income was $358 in 1913; today it is about $1,647. In this 44-year period, per capita income increased 4 1/2 times while the per capita tax payments increased an even 400 times.
