The Sentinel is by no means an apostle of unremunerated effort, its publishers take more pleasure in attaining an ideal than in laying up treasure. This means that every mark of appreciation of our efforts shown in the way of increased business will result in our giving just that much more back in improvements to the paper. In fact, we have several ideas in mind now that will be carried out a trifle before conditions warrant. We will always endeavor to be a little in advance of the procession. All we expect is support in proportion to what we do-and when we want anything we believe in telling about it-others could profit by doing the same thing.
