PREVENT FIRE BY MAKING HEATING APPARATUS SAFE

Stoves and furnaces, together with the smoke pipes, flues, etc., should be carefully inspected at reasonable intervals. This may save your home and the lives of your family. Sixty-five per cent of all fires occur in dwellings, and defective flues and heating apparatus are responsible for most of these. The general rules for the safeguarding of domestic heating appliances are as follows:

Examine smoke pipes to see that they have not rusted through and that joints are tight.

Be certain that there are no cracks in the chimneys or flues, and that they are cleaned out regularly.

Place stoves, furnaces and pipes far enough from walls and woodwork to avoid overheating.

Cover the nearest wood surfaces with sheet asbestos, sheet iron or tin; if iron or tin is used, leave an air space behind it.

Where stovepipes or heating pipes pass through walls, enclose the pipes in galvanized iron, double-walled, ventilated thimbles at least twelve inches wider than the diameter of the pipes.

Protect the floor beneath the stove with sheet metal, and have it extend forward at least twelve inches directly beneath the door to the ashpit.

Surround the base of the furnace with brick, stone or concrete.

Fix a guard around the pipe in the attic, so nothing may be stored against it.

Never pour kerosene into a coal or wood stove, even when the fire is out.

Never put ashes into wooden boxes or barrels; use a strong metal can.

Study the drafts and dampers.

Do not let the stoves or pipes become red hot.

Keep the stoves, furnaces, flues and chimneys clean.

Inspect the chimneys and flues to be sure that they are sound.

Do not dry wood in an oven.

Do not hang wet clothing too near to a stove.

Keep curtains and other cloth away from stoves and pipes.
