

YOU NEVER HAVE OCCASION TO HEAR THE HOUSEWIFE WHO WEARS

KRYPTOK GLASSES
THE INVISIBLE BIFOCALS

complain about misplacing or bothering with two pairs of glasses.

In Kryptoks she carries both visions in one pair of solid lenses all the time.

But no one can tell they are bifocals, because of the absence of seams.

Bifocals may not be required in your case, but if any kind of glasses will help you to see better we can serve you to your entire satisfaction.

Bring your sight troubles to us.

SOCIETY

Social chat, a short musical program and the regular monthly business meeting occupied the time of the Methodist ladies' aid society at its meeting Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. S. Benson. Mrs. Simpson Hamrick and Mrs. J. P. Godard served a light luncheon consisting of nut sundae and cake. Two very pleasing solos were given by Miss Mary Ellen Benson.

Miss Alberta Cavender, of Portland, and Mrs. Ernest Bost, of Texas, were guests at a picnic given in their honor on Mosby creek Wednesday. Miss Cavender is visiting at the home of Mrs. Karl K. Mills and Mrs. Bost is the guest of Mrs. Roy Short.

Mrs. E. G. O. Groat entertained her Sunday school class of the Baptist church Tuesday forenoon in the park.

Mrs. Ray Trask entertained the M. P. G. club at her home Wednesday afternoon, the afternoon being spent on the lawn, where a bonfire and refreshments were enjoyed. Mrs. Trask's guests, besides members of the club, included Miss Alberta Cavender, of Portland, Mrs. Ernest Bost, of Texas, Mrs. Belle Hanson and Mrs. S. A. Davis, of Minneapolis, and Miss Nellie Myers.

Playmates gathered yesterday afternoon at the home of Horace Elliott, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Elliott, on Quincey avenue, for a birthday party in honor of his seventh birthday. Games, refreshments and a birthday cake helped in the entertainment of his little guests.

Mrs. W. G. Beattie's Presbyterian Sunday school class entertained her yesterday afternoon with a picnic on Mosby creek.

Eating Main Steaks This Week. John Groves and son Irl got a 150 pound bear Sunday while on an outing up Mosby creek. John got the first shot and Irl finished the job.

DIARY OF OPAL ENDS BUT DISCUSSION DOES NOT

Mixture of Fact and Possible Fancy Still Presents Problem Which Awaits Solution.

a door knob may be considered the production of a precocious child but when she tells her diary that "Dear Love," a young married friend, has confided to her (then not over a seven-year-old) the expected arrival of a baby and says that "no one knows the secret except Dear Love and her husband and me"—and a dozen or so of her pets of which she gives their classic names—one wonders if the neighbors were prone to confide to this fairy of the woods such delicate secrets, or whether the incident may not have been dragged in to give a chance to parade a rare piece of humor.

The oft-repeated statement that "men are such a blessing to have about" will, by many of experience, most certainly be labelled the production of a very young mind or the humorous fantasy of an older one.

If we presume that the diary was written in later life, the question must then arise: Was it so written with premeditated intent to deceive or did the girl have a dual personality? Did she, as some of my correspondents ask me to believe, have a spiritual being when she became a child and wrote in the spirit the things which have brought to her real self so much of glory and so much of censure. And if written in real life, would her stunt not be almost as remarkable as if the diary were produced in the manner claimed?

After a study of the mass of correspondence I have received from every point of the compass, after following many leads which at first seemed certain to produce something definite, I must admit that I do not feel that the evidence is irrefutably conclusive either way. I believe that I will in time be able to give a story which will be backed by conclusive evidence in regard to both the foster-parent fantasy and the genuineness or lack of genuineness of the diary, but there is so much of possibility and probability that I would not venture a positive statement as to what the probable future story is going to prove or disprove.

It may be said with certainty that most of those who have always known the Whiteleys and Opal, are more firm than ever in the belief that the foster-parent fantasy is false and many of these are severe in their criticism of the things which have been allowed to appear in the diary which tend to give the idea that Opal was an overworked and abused little girl. Such are prone to recollect an entirely different kind of treatment of Opal and the other members of the Whiteley family. Also the production of a diary of some 150,000 words by a little girl during the year between her sixth and seventh birthdays, as stated in Atlantic, all printed most laboriously in the cramped print of a child and the pages childishly decorated in colored-pencil art, would seem to alone furnish all a child could do in that length of time outside of school hours. It can not be denied that the diary shows its author to have been a most extraordinarily industrious child.

The diary is interwoven with incidents that are known to have happened in the chronological order in which they are so entertainingly related and they are told with a detail that would not seem possible under a presumption that the diary was written in later years, yet the fact that the author has repeatedly written, even during the publication of the diary, for verification of dates and facts gives the doubters all the evidence they ask to confidently affirm that the little girl they knew could not and did not do many of the inconsistent things stated in the diary.

One thing can be said with positiveness and that is that it remained for Opal Whiteley, nature-taunted wild rambler rose of the Oregon woods—of the Cottage Grove country—to produce what is one of the most remarkable pieces of literature ever put into print—and at the same time to give to the world an unbelievable, yet believable, story of foster-parentage. Both are full of probabilities and improbabilities; entrancing in interest; stranger than fiction, if fact; stranger than fact, if fiction. Incidentally both have combined to make what probably is the best news story that ever has broken in Oregon, one which even those having no acquaintance with any of the parties concerned read with enthralled interest, and psychologists, psychiatrists, students of human nature have had presented to them a problem—a mystery, if you please—which as yet seems inexplicable.

Another Tie Game.

The games seem to be the fad in this section. Sam Mackin's aggregation of ball players met the London team on the latter's grounds Tuesday evening and when darkness brought an end to the performance the score was 9 to 9.
