THINGS WE THINK

No one will ever be able to make the precious metals out of the baser ones and literary treasures will never originate in the mind devoted to base and sordid thoughts.

Put off until tomorrow the mean thing you intended doing today.

Every woman knows her husband is the best one on earth—and must often feel deep sorrow for what other wives must have to put up with.

Many hot-headed people are also swell-headed. We suppose the heat causes the expansion.

There's quite a difference between hypocritical and hypercritical but not much improvement.

Of course the sugar trust's way of stealing was refined.

Don't kindle a fire in a girl's heart until you are certain you can furnish the fuel to keep it going.

You can tell how married folks get along at home by watching them when they happen to be partners at a card party.

Nine times out of ten the person who says that people don't appreciate him, doesn't appreciate the people who made him.

Every person has some good point, look for it.

Most ghosts are seen with the backs of the eyes.

No one can expect others to think much of him if he doesn't think much of himself, but often thinking too much of one's self results in others not thinking anything of you.

Could you live on $25,000 a year? asks a daily. We have so far been able to keep expenditures comfortably under that amount.

Reform, like charity, should begin at home.

No doubt half the people in this world who are in want have reached that condition because of their own indiscretions, but that is a lame excuse for refusing charity.

We can't all be shining lights—many of us are just smokers.

There's one time a man can always get credit for all he's worth. That's when the assessor comes round.

Our rights are about as serious a matter with us as our wrongs.

Money talks, so they tell us, but few of us have it with us long enough to get sufficiently acquainted with it without feeling presumptuous.
