

Ilwaco icon coming back to life

Former Aberdeen Packing Company undergoing substantial renovations

Building materials are lowered to the roof of the Aberdeen Packing Company building, left, in Ilwaco earlier this spring. After a coronavirus-mandated hiatus, renovations recently resumed on iconic structure's roof. Known to many older peninsula residents as the Doupe building, for the family that long operated a general merchandise store there in the mid-20th century, it is being converted into apartments.

After sitting vacant and deteriorating for a decade after the death of its former owner, the former headquarters of the Aberdeen Packing Company on the main intersection in Ilwaco is undergoing substantial renovations.

A workman guides a load of materials onto the roof of an iconic, long-neglected building in Ilwaco. Construction has resumed thanks to a slight relaxation in covid-19 rules.
