New leadership at Seaside hospital

Coplin has worked for Providence for over 20 years

Providence Seaside Hospital has named Rebecca Coplin as its chief executive.

Coplin has worked at Providence for over 20 years, and has been the interim chief executive since July. Previously, she worked in the specialty institutes, process improvement, customer service and strategy divisions.

"It is an honor to see all these roles come together, working as a team, to care for our community," Coplin said in an email. "I am bringing with me an enduring spirit and an optimism for steadier days ahead."

Coplin said that being chief executive during the pandemic has been both eye-opening and heartwarming.

"We truly have outstanding caregivers who have worked so hard to keep one another and our patients safe as we have navigated the pandemic," she said. "The teamwork they demonstrate is remarkable and I am committed to finding ways to help our teams recover from the stress and the strain of the pandemic."

Coplin's goals for the hospital include prioritizing recovery and well-being for caregivers, and to increase access to health care by attracting more providers.

"Overall, I want the community to know that we are here for them and that they can rely on us for high quality, compassionate care," she said.

Coplin's mother recently relocated to Seaside, and she said they both enjoy exploring the North Coast and going to local businesses.

"Between my job and my family — including my husband and two teenage sons — it sure feels like each day is very full and every day brings me joy," Coplin said.

Rebecca Coplin is the chief executive of Providence Seaside Hospital.
