Politics and print

We're gripped with election fever here at the TODAY Towers remote annex. This will be the first time that I get to vote since moving to the US in 2007 and I have been perusing my ballot with all the excitement of a sophomore in Civics 101. (Civics 101 is widely viewed as the most thrilling of all classes in this country, right?). Since becoming a US citizen last summer, I have been eagerly awaiting this opportunity to flex my democratic muscle, one shaded oval at a time.

You will notice several election-related ads in this week's edition and we are extremely grateful to the various advertisers involved and flattered that they are interested in getting their messages in front of you, our readers. I hope that, regardless of your voting intentions, details of these various endorsements will be of use as you make decisions on which candidates to support.

And we are also thankful to everyone who has endorsed us by joining Team TODAY. Your support has helped pay for the newsprint, ink, bandwidth and time that went into this week's print and online editions. We look forward to delivering your TODAY merchandise and to welcoming new members over the coming weeks.
