Assistant editor Quinn

A chip off the old block

from the editor

TODAY Towers has been the site of much reflection of late as we ponder the future of Oregon Coast TODAY in an uncertain world. (Spoiler alert: watch this space next week for very exciting news. We're not going anywhere).

But amid all the spreadsheets and forecasting, there was room for some misty-eyed reflection, too. This nostalgic reverie was triggered by the sight of assistant editor Quinn wearing a Transformers sweater that my mother knitted for me when I was a kid. This, in turn prompted a trans-Atlantic request for photos of myself at the tender age of seven so that we could do a little comparison.

And while I am hugely thankful to my wife, Krista, for bringing some sturdy genes to the table and sparing young Quinn the misery of chunky-framed eyeglasses, I am mostly struck by how happy both these kids look.

During such a time of upheaval, it pays to count one's blessings. As I contemplate my life on the Oregon Coast, I find many. Whether you are a fellow coastie or just passing through, I hope that you find many also.
