Students at the College will soon be able to put their trivia and heretofore useless knowledge to good purpose by participating in the College Bowl games, to be initiated on campus.

Associated Student Government, in its Nov. 10 meeting, agreed to spend approximately $500 to finance College Bowl games and participate in regional tournaments.

College Bowl, as some may remember, was a television show popular in the 50's and 60's. It was a quiz game where two teams from different colleges competed by answering questions on a variety of subjects. The winners generally received scholarships or cash prizes for their schools.

Student teams of four will participate in at least ten competitions on campus. The winning team will go to the regional trials in Tacoma, Wash. Regional winners will then have all expenses paid to a national competition sponsored by Reader's Digest.

ASG holds retreat at Cannon Beach

Cannon Beach was the setting for the first Associated Student Government retreat for officers and senators last weekend.

"I think the retreat achieved the purpose which was to acquaint senators and officers with ASG activities and to get the officers and senators acquainted with each other," said Jim Roberts, director of student activities.

Discussed at the retreat were ASG job descriptions for both senators and officers, college organization, office operational procedures, student activities programs, ASG budget and goals for 1977-78.

"I was disappointed. I don't think we accomplished what we were supposed to," said Dale Holland, ASG senator.

Other people seemed to be more positive about the retreat.

"It was beneficial to the senators to learn and discuss first hand information, other than trying to fumble through the year as they have in the past. The retreat seemed to be a large success for the senators," said Mike McCarty, ASG president.

"All in all, I found the retreat to be very worthwhile. It added to my understanding of ASG and I hope that the senators that were present gained some insight into the internal workings of student government," said Don Bixler, ASG vice president.

"I thought it was good, and I got something out of it," Tim Selliken, senator, said.

"I really felt good about the retreat. I have three super people working with me, who started work today. Publicity should pick up because of the help. My only regret is that the 10 senators who couldn't come lost out," said Barbara St. Mary, ASG publicity director.

This was the first retreat of its kind attempted, and it was successful enough to try again in the future, according to Debbie Baker, student activities counselor.

"I think the money was well spent," said Anne Marinos, senator. "I'm glad I went."

Attending the retreat were McCarty, ASG president; Bixler, vice president; Maureen Kearney, business manager; Hallie Brown, activities director; and St. Mary, publicity director. The senators who attended were Selliken, Walt Eidman, Holland, Kirk Burst, Marinos, Mardi Syales, Susan Lair, Phil Boitnott, Joe Miken and Wanda Walker. Roberts, director of student activities and Baker, student activities counselor were the chaperones on the trip.

The equipment will also be used for such things as intramural trivia quizzes and freshman orientation.

In other business, ASG:

-Decided to install 12 lockers in each building with five or six of them designated for use by handicapped students.

-Accepted the constitutions for the bowling club, the gymnastics club and NORML club.

-Heard a report on the matter of booking attractions through Double T Productions, a publicity agency in Portland. The College provide the facilities, security personnel, staging and ushers for entertainers for 10 percent of the profit with no capital outlay. Double T will handle booking and publicity as well as payment for all acts.

-Accepted Wanda Walker to fill the vacancy in the student senate.

-Formed a committee to set up task boards for emergency needs and

Keep-Well Clinics offer health screening to senior citizens

Keep-Well Clinics, sponsored by the Clackamas County Public Health Department, are a health-screening process for senior citizens in the area. They are located throughout the county in Lake Oswego, Wilsonville, West Linn, Canby, Oregon City, Milwaukie, Kendall, Molalla, Estacada, Sandy and Wemme (Mt. Hood area).

"This is a screening process. It does not take the place of a doctor's visit," said Mary Kerrigan, nurse for Clackamas County Public Health Department. "It is a process to look for the abnormal and refers that person to a doctor or some other source that can help with the problem."

"We check for diet deficiencies, hearing and visual problems and just talk with people and reassure them. It is a one-to-one personal interview," Kerrigan said.

"A man came to our clinic that was 65 years old and could not read. I discovered this as he had no reports filled out and was very careful to avoid situations where this would be detected. He had lived way back in the mountains as a child and had to help his mother raise younger brothers and sisters, so he never made it to school. Through the clinic he is getting the training he needs and is thrilled about it," Kerrigan said.

Jean Taylor, nursing instructor on leave from the College, is doing independent practicum with Clackamas County Keep-Well Clinics as she works for her masters in geriatrics.

The clinic began in April, 1977. Two clinics are held every week and persons may attend by appointment only. The visits last about two hours and are run by Mary Kerrigan and Karen Smith, nurses from the Clackamas County Public Health Department, volunteers from the Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) and people in the community.

A person must be 60 years old or over to be eligible for the Keep-Well Clinic and transportation is provided if needed.

Dr. Schilke, health officer, supervises the clinics and signs all referrals.

"Some of these people are fantastic," Kerrigan said. "In Sandy, an 85-year old was taking real estate law. She didn't finish, but she enjoyed it and it filled her extra time."

For locations of clinics call Clackamas County Public Health Division, 655-8470.
