

STATE CHAMPIONS

Speech team comes out on top

The College speech team was judged the top community college speech team in the state at the Northwest Community College Forensics Championship at Portland Community College last weekend.

The Clackamas team took first place in the Oregon sweepstakes and also nabbed second place for the Northwest region, according to speech Coach Frank Harlow, who called the team's performance

"fantastic." Curtis Lowery and Kathy McMahon brought home individual first places, and several other speakers brought home trophies from the competition. Lowery placed first in oratory while McMahon took first place in editorial commentary. She also placed third in the interpretive category.

Kevin Marcott placed second in oratory and was a finalist in the editorial commentary category. Mike Cookingham also was a finalist in the impromptu speaking competition. Marilyn Bushway was a finalist in the championships, which ended a year of competition for the College forensics squad.

Hoedown: best party in town

By Mike Koller
Of The Print

Believe it or not, the best party in town last Saturday night was in a rather smelly barn some five miles outside of beautiful downtown Molalla, where the beer was flowing freely and the spirited bluegrass band was laying down some hot tunes.

What? Why wasn't I invited? Well, you were invited, along with every other CCC student, and if you had been paying closer attention to all the announcements for the Associated Student Government Hoedown (otherwise known as the party of the year in Clackamas County) you would have been dancing, singing and drinking happily with the 850 to 900 party-goers who helped make the 1979 Hoedown a memorable event.

Debbie Baker, student activities counselor, summed up the atmosphere of the Hoedown in two words—rousing success.

A success it was, with Dr. Corn's Bluegrass Remedy playing all the appropriate bluegrass and country classics that made everyone get up and dance the night away.

Attendance at the Hoedown was also a gigantic success, as this year's party drew between 200 and 300 more participants than last year's.

Financially, the Hoedown was also a winner with the front gate making $1,750 before expenses, the beer garden, staffed by the College Foundation, bringing in $1,600 before expenses and the concession stand making $200 before expenses.

As Dr. Corn's Bluegrass Remedy struck their last chord and the bright lights flooded the enormous barn that somehow didn't smell so bad anymore, we all staggered toward the exit a little blurry eyed with silly grins on our faces. What an evening! Ya'll should have been there.

Board makes bid award for new mini-computer

The college board of Education awarded bids for a mini-computer system for the campus, seven oscilloscopes and two passenger vans during its May 9 meeting.

The board approved the bid for Service Data Processing for a mini-computer main frame costing $195,631 to be financed over five years. An additional software package was approved at a maximum cost of $35,000. The computer system will be used for processing registration, business and payroll and other College departments.

Tektronix, Inc., received the bid for seven oscilloscopes to be used by the College's electronics classes. The specially designed oscilloscopes will have a total cost of $20,580.

The board approved the purchase of two 15-passenger vans from Webster Ford for a cost of $18,046. The vans will replace the college bus, which was sold to United Buses, Inc.

Dr. Alvin K. Pfahl of the Clackamas County Educational Service District received a special achievement plaque from the board for his service to education in the area. Pfahl was the founder of the college's occupational advisory council.

In other business, the board received reports on the college's programs in credit for prior learning, advanced credit for high school course work and the electrical power drafting technical program. The board also approved a policy for the hiring and transitioning of Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) employees.
