Leanne Lally and Don Ives have been selected to succeed Cyndi Bacon and Happie Thacker as the editors of the College's two major student publications next year.

A first-year student, Lally is currently finishing her third term as arts editor for The Print. A journalism major, her experience includes three years on Gladstone High School's "Roamin' Scroll."

"I am looking forward to producing a paper that people will look at, not throw on the floor," she said. "I have no specific goals at the moment. I want a chance to look at what I have to work with and get an idea of how it goes."

A slight rearrangement of the editorial board is a plan that Lally has in mind, with hopes of creating more depth in arts department coverage.

"As arts editor, I think that I have been forced to spread myself too thin," she said. "I hope to create a feature department that will go more in depth."

With the number of returning students from this year's staff, Lally expressed confidence that the department will put out a good paper next year.

"People will just be picking up again, and they know what their jobs entail," she said. "I'm not really nervous because I know that everybody will be there to help if I get in a spot."

Ives foresees several changes that will take place when he is editor of the quarterly Feature magazine.

A change in the basic format is one. The next issues will come out as supplements to The Print, instead of as a separate magazine, as done in the past.

Ives also hopes to promote more entires and build a larger staff.

"I hope to get it more publicized so more people will know to write for it," he said. "I plan to spend a lot of time on it and get a staff together."

A first-year student, Ives is a journalism major. His experience includes reporting for The Print this year, aside from writing as a hobby.

"I've always liked to write. I've written quite a few things for Feature this year, and I hope I can still write for it next year," he said. "I plan to solicit for help on a personal level. I will go to the art department and ask the instructors who would be good to have on the staff, then go talk to those persons. I don't think that solely advertising in the paper gets good enough results."

"I think there are a lot of talented people who could take advantage of Feature," he said.

Money awarded

Seven Clackamas County high school students have been selected recipients of one-term tuition scholarships to the College by the art department.

Human day

A day in celebration of the humanities is being prepared for May 29.

The art department will be hosting the "potluck" in their quarters at the Smuckers Center. All humanities class students are invited (drama, GED, Ecology, etc.), and other CCC students. All who come are encouraged to bring food whether it's steak and lobster or a jar of pickles.

There is no admission charge, just food.

Positions open; decision coming

"No decisions have been made at this time," stated Howard Fryett, assistant to the College president, about the action taken to fill the recently vacated positions of enrollment coordinator and public information officer.

"We've had two applications for each position, from current employees and recommendations have been made by an internal screening committee," Fryett said. "The president and I discussed it a little and have decided to wait."

Possible administrative changes involving both positions are factors retarding the reinstatement process.

The possibility of adding staff development, which involves keeping teachers and administrators up to date on new trends within their field, to the duties of enrollment coordinator, and more interaction with the public information crew, are some of the changes being discussed by the internal committee, the College president, John Hakanson and his assistant, Howard Fryett.

Doug Roberts, who applied for the position, is temporarily filling Bill Shreve's shoes as acting public information officer. He commented that he would "feel a lot better if it were permanent, but it's better than not getting it at all."

The enrollment manager position, which Gary Haroldsen held until resigning recently, is currently vacant.

Other alternatives discussed were switching authority for enrollment manager to a department other than the president's office.

"It is critical that they are housed where they can do the best job possible," said Fryett.

"I believe the committee's feelings are that the enrollment coordinator has too many responsibilities which spread him too thin," said Art Hames, counselor, who helped with the establishment of the enrollment coordinator position one year ago. "The percentage of the community population which is exposed to the College is less than what it should be, we've got to project a better image because we have a lot to offer." Hames added.
