

Senate election time draws near

"We have 20 openings, 20 candidates, and a write-in faculty on the ballot," said Richard Weiss, Associated Student Government vice president, in reference to the upcoming ASG senate elections.

The elections will be Oct. 9-12. The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., closing Friday at 5 p.m.

The candidates include:

Cindy Bushlen, 18, is a psychology major planning a career in family planning and counseling. Her goals are to "stimulate student interest in our Associated Student Government and establish a better line of communication with program areas that have been inadequately involved in the decision-making process in the past."

Cherlynn Clark, 17, was active in student government at La Salle High School. A special education major, she plans to transfer to the Oregon College of Education. She would like to see ASG accomplish "more effectiveness in representing the student body as a whole. I would like to see more social activities with more people involved. I would also like to see more student voice in such matters as the deli."

Fred Dye, 21, would like to see "an alternative food service in Randall Hall, and help meet the changing needs of previously uninvolved segments of the student body."

Terri Epidendio, 19, is a business major. Establishing a sandwich deli on campus and "getting more social activities for the students" are her goals for the year.

Mark Epperson, 28, seeks "a wider base of representation in the student government."

Eric Etzel, 19, is an agribusiness major who was active in high school in student government, 4-H and Future Farmers of America. He hopes ASG "maintains the high standard of student government they have had in the past. I would like to see a closer bond between the student body and the student government, decreased apathy through increased student involvement in school government and activities, an increase in the voice of students and efficiency of the senate and cabinet."

Marcia Feil, 19, is studying early childhood education. She would like to see "a stronger bond between students and ASG. After all, ASG is a voice to the students of the college. I would also like to see that the needs of the students are met, such as music in the game room and maybe a deli."

Judy Hostetler, 18, would like ASG to promote "more unity within the school by supplying more student functions to get involved in. I would like to see more publication of events, and make the activities more available to all students, by arranging better times and places."

Ramona Isackson, 19, is a home economics major. She would like ASG to "establish effective representation on the student body and get things done which need doing."

Matthew Johnson, 18, is a journalism major. He believes it is the job of the ASG senators "to know who we are and what we are doing. Also, I would like to see more involvement with the senior citizens on campus. They are here and have the right to be heard."

Frank J. Kraaz, 19, is studying agriculture education.

He is interested in "successful activities for students at CCC, such as Doc Holliday's Sunday-night disco and the possibility of a deli, offering students a different variation in their lunch program. But first and most of all, I feel the senate has to work as a team and with the cabinet and with the students."

Vincent D. Maxion (Max), 24, is an electronics major planning to be a studio recording engineer. He was a senator winter and spring terms last year. He would like to see ASG "take care of the student, to inform the student of special events on or off campus, and to help the student with problems concerning the school."

Dave Nase, 19, would like to "get into the politics of the school, to be more involved and learn more about student government and have some say on the way they run it."

Ginny Riggs, 20, is majoring in telecommunications and theater arts. She was an ASG senator last year and also was on the wrestling rally. "First of all, student apathy is a problem," she believes. "The older students aren't interested in the younger students' activities, and vice versa. What ASG needs to do is to get more activities for all the students. Getting the students involved is another problem. So many people complain about things but never do anything about possibly taking care of problems. I'd really like to see more student-senate relationships, because the students could relay information that would possibly pass by the senate."

Joseph Schweizer, 18, is majoring in chemistry and physics and hopes to be admitted to the U.S. Coast Guard Academy. "I plan to review all bills and see where necessary changes can be made to benefit all students. I plan to initiate action in the student government to keep up on key issues, and not let the epidemic of apathy deter students from having their opinions heard."

Ginny Eschweiler, 18, is a business major, who is running for senator because she is "very interested in college functions and wants to get involved."

Also running for senate positions are Candi Davis, Marshal Monchalin, Mary Weber and Donna Zumwalt. The Print was unable to obtain information about them prior to deadline.

Horse donated to class

Another donation has been made to the College and this time it doesn't have four wheels. It has four hooves.

Silent Partner, a championship show horse, has been donated to the College's horsemanship classes by Ward

Cook, president of Oregon Pioneer Savings.

The 12-year thoroughbred gelding has won hunter and jumper competitions in equestrian shows throughout the western half of the U.S.

One of the most prestigious titles won by the horse was the Junior Working Hunter State class in an Illinois show that included horses from throughout the United States.

Silent Partner will be boarded at Horsemanship West in Oregon City. Dick Shrake, owner of Horsemanship West, is donating the cost and space of room and board for the College celebrity.
