Clackamas Community College

Vol. XIV, No. 8

Lummy

Jane Rickenbaugh, one of the College's dance instructors, has choreographed a dance to be presented at the Dancer's Workshop in Portland, Nov. 21, 22, and 23.

Rickenbaugh's piece, entitled "The Estrangement" will be presented as part of a program of modern dances by Portland choreographers.

The Dancer's Workshop is located at 30 NW 1st in Portland. The program starts at 8 p.m. Admission is $3.

Cafeteria to Be remodeled

By the request of students in a recent survey, a new cafeteria serving area has been designed. Construction on the new area begins Dec. 1, less than 25 days before Christmas. The survey was conducted last May, and Donald Fisher, Facilities Development and Planning Officer had plans drawn up of a new area.

Enlarged, the new serving area will have two lines serving students: a hot food line and a cold food line. "This system is similar to other college cafeterias," said Fisher of the project.

The new cafeteria is costing the College $67,000. "Barring any problems, the widened cafeteria will be open for student and faculty use by the first day of Winter term," Fisher said.

The construction work begins Dec. 1. What will the College do for food for the last 18 days of class? Not starve, that's for sure. Ninety percent of the food cooked and sold in the cafeteria will be cooked and sold in the concession stand in Randall Hall. Students and faculty will be purchasing food concession-stand style. "There's enough seats for 100 people in Randall Hall and all of the seats in the present cafeteria will be usable," said Fisher.

"All of the food will be cooked in the concession stand. If one wanted to sit in the cafeteria, you will have to take your food over to there,"

Fisher said.

Changes are also taking place just outside the cafeteria, as another portion of the college is undergoing a facelift this winter.

Improvements will be concentrated in the central mall area between Barlow Hall and the Community Center, according to Andy Rice, a landscape architect with landscape Planning Associates of Oregon City.

In response to campus design problems identified by an ad hoc committee consisting of members of the College art advisory board, the College community, and the public. The biggest improvements will be seen in the courtyard area, Rice reported.

The plans, approved by the College board in July, include removing the cement retaining wall lining the west-southwest portion of the courtyard and replacing it with a sloping grassy knoll. The restructuring will serve to soften the stark division between the upper and lower levels of the courtyard and to make the area more usable, Rice explained.

A small permanent stage is planned for the northeastern corner of the courtyard, creating an amphitheatre for musical events, theatre, ceremonies and other formal occasions. The upper level at the southeastern corner will become a garden.

The central mall improvements are expected to be complete by the summer.

After election defeat

College picks up tax pieces

Faced with the Nov. 4 defeat of its $8.7 million Tax Base, and the expiration of its current Serial Levy, the College will be 50 percent underfunding after July 1981 unless funding can be secured.

The proposed Tax Base was turned down by a 9 percent margin of 40,377 votes to 34,677 votes. Dr. John W. Hakanson, College President commented, "The issue wasn't well understood; 8,000 people didn't even bother to mark the Tax Base page when they voted." If the Tax Base had passed, it would have been the College's first. Although it would have made no change in the Budget Levy tax rate of $1.90 per thousand assessed valuation, the Tax Base would have covered the operational and construction costs of the College for the next 3 to 5 years and provided a continuing financial base.

With the College receiving 50 percent of its funding from local taxes, Dr. Ronald Kaiser, Dean of Instructional Services, said, "Unless voters approve a funding request prior to July, there will be a substantial reduction in the College's ability to provide programs and services to the District."

The College has been forced to put a hold on future construction projects, Bill Ryan, Dean of College Services, commented. "We currently have 60 percent of the instructional space that we will need in eight years," Hakanson continued. "If we continue at our present rate of growth, we will need at least 200,000 additional square feet before the end of the decade. The rational method of growth is to build in steps. We can't just wait until 1990 to build the space we will need." Under the defeated Tax Base a Theater and Library Complex, an Auto Instructions Lab and an Administrations Building had been planned for.

"The College's Board of Education has only two immediate options for future funding—a rate based Serial Levy or a Standard Levy," Ryan explained, "and neither will provide for future construction."

If the College Board is to secure funds by levy before July 1981, it will need to place a measure on the February 17 ballot, and make a decision concerning that before January 11. Ryan expects the Board to consider future funding at the next few meetings.

This week

This week in the PRINT, the "Shot Down in Flames" column makes its deadly appearance along with two letters condemning the author of the last issues' "People are snakes." That can be found on the opinion page.

J. Dana Haynes reports on the confidence clinic on the news page. The confidence clinic teaches and informs displaced homemakers how to survive in the world after a divorce. Also on the news page is an interview with the mental health counselor. A last look at the Career Fair is also located on the news page. Word has it that it served its purpose rather well.

The Clackamas Christian Fellowship Club is focused upon on the features page. Who's on arts & lives page? The cast of Tennessee Williams' magnificent memory play, "The Glass Menagerie." Also on arts & lives is a look at tonight's Jazz night.

The soccer team beat Portland Community College 3-2 and are now on their way to the Nationals. A report on the team and their play-off progress will be found on sports. Also on sports, the volleyball team is in the play-offs.

The Print is not going to the printers next week due to the Thanksgiving Holiday. Our next publication will hit the stands Dec. 3.
