CCC, PSU sponsor leadership clinic

"The trend toward more local government control is placing greater demands on citizen involvement and yet, the pool of active participants is dwindling," contends David Dickson, Community Development coordinator for the College.

In its attempt to give a more detailed look at the dynamics of voluntary citizen organizations, the College, in cooperation with Portland State University, is sponsoring "Leadership '80s," a series of workshops beginning April 18 from 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m., and continuing Tuesdays, April 21, 28, May 5 and 12, from 6:45-10 p.m. in the Community Center.

Conducted by key leaders from education, government and business, the workshops will offer ideas and practical advice helpful to run more effective meetings, raise money for projects, get more people involved, and generally increase the effectiveness of the organization.

Improving communication with an organization will be discussed by Dr. Al Siebert, a psychologist and author of "The Survivor Personality." Ardis Stevenson, assistant director for Clackamas County Department of Environmental Services and past chair of the Lake Oswego Planning Commission, will consider the format of citizen groups, and Mark Millemann, a management trainer for Tektronix, will offer advice on conducting meetings and producing quality decisions.

Other discussion leaders include Arty Trost, president of a Portland-based organization consulting firm; Robert Ridgley, a Harvard Law School graduate, current chair of the Oregon School Board Association, a trustee for Lewis and Clark College and former chair of the Portland School Board; Vince Kohler, a staff reporter for "The Oregonian," Shirley Lions, chair for the Mulino Area Neighborhood Association and former vice-chair for the Clackamas County Republican Party and the Clackamas Community College Foundation.

Leadership '80s is designed primarily for persons currently serving in a volunteer capacity on city and county boards and advisory bodies, school advisory committees and parent clubs, civic organizations, neighborhood groups, private non-profit boards.

The fee is $15 for all five sessions, $8 for the April 18 session only (which includes lunch), and $3 for each Tuesday session. Senior citizens holding Golden Age cards receive half tuition.
