

THE ASHLAND FESTIVAL is famous nation-wide for its professionalism and entertainment.

Actors lecture, perform

The job of a sociologist is to categorize human beings into various sects. This same form of categorization happens to those who wish to partake in theatrical activities—most prominently, acting.

Various terms such as "character actors," "Shakespearean actors" and "bad actors" are slapped on theatrical players, sometimes crippling them for the life of their artistic work. Two Shakespearean actors found their way to the college last Monday to perform for the writing, drama, and literature classes.

Joan Stuart-Morris and

Stuart Duckworth, one of nine teams touring schools throughout the Pacific Northwest, presented dramatic programs concerning the life of professional Shakespearean actors. "I thought they were exemplary of the modern professional actors," that Joey Rose, theatre arts secretary.

Annette Unwin, who teaches the Shakespeare class on campus, was the catalyst for this year's visit. "They have a different idea of Shakespeare as a dramatic production, as opposed to literature," she noted.

The visit is one of the Oregon Shakespearean

Festival's audience development projects, and part of its educational program. The tours are performed once a year, prior to the start of the season.

The Shakespearean actors performed throughout the day, giving four performances; at 9 a.m., 11 a.m., noon, and at 2 p.m.

Readings included a monologue from "The Glass Menagerie," "Twelfth Night," "The Tempest," and "Richard the III." The two performers also held a discussion session with the college acting classes on the subject of theatre as a career.

Computer committee discovers dirth of on-campus terminals

More than $300,000 has been earmarked for the expansion of the computer resource facilities at the College.

In October, the CCC Board of Education approved the purchase of a new mini-terminal and 13 micro-computers at a cost of $299,707. The Board also agreed to fund a new computer staff position for $26,000. The action was based on recommendations filed by the college's Computer User Task Force.

After attempting to make adjustments in the schedules for computer use, the task force concluded that there was simply more of a demand for the terminals than supply, according to Tsuyoshi Inouye, data processing officer.

Inouye explained that the task force shifted the computer use schedules during registration and finals week, (when the computers are in great demand) but found it still interfered with student use.

"The need for the additional computer terminals is due to the increased utilization of the equipment within the college," Inouye said.

The new staff person will be hired in January.

Silver tongued team takes tops at tourney

The College Speech Team talked their way into a good showing at last weekend's forensics tournament held at Lower Columbia College.

"I'm pleased with how well we did," head coach Frank Harlow said. Attending the tourney were 19 two- and four-year schools from throughout the Northwest.

Edward Matthew Coyne took 4th in the "Mandible Marathon" (note: a mandible, for those who are not up on the parts of the mouth, is the lower jaw of invertebrates). Coyne was also a finalist in the "Impromptu" category.

Linda Perkins and Carrie Nelson performed a selection from Neil Simon's "The Gingerbread Lady" for the utilization. The job will be to maintain the micro-computers, keep an eye out for new uses for them, and to initiate development of the system of micros," Inouye said.

The mini-computers will be installed in Barlow Hall.

"Dual Interpretation" part of the tournament, and made it to the finals. Mike Doane took 3rd in the "Expository" competition and Linda Perkins was a finalist in "Editorial Comment."

Only seven of the 12 speech team members made it to the competition, held in Kelso-Longview, Washington. "Five of my people were not ready for this tournament, so they stayed home," Harlow said.

The next forensics competition will be held over the weekend of Dec. 4 at Clark College in Vancouver, Washington. That will be the Regional Community Colleges Tournament. "We're hoping to do as well at regionals," Harlow said.

College sponsors 'Awareness week'

The first Annual Handicapped Awareness Week will begin November 30 and continue through Saturday, Dec. 5.

Students will be able to experience what it is like to be disabled, blind, in a wheelchair, or have a hearing impairment.

The Handicapped Resource Center put together an agenda for the week-long activities that being with a film at 11 a.m. and noon in the Fireside Lounge.

According to Handicapped Specialist Debbie Bennett, students will be assigned a disability. "One student is going to be a stroke victim, and he will wear weights on his wrist and legs. That way he will be able to see that the arm is not paralyzed, it's just a dead weight," Bennett explained. Another student will have simulated arthritis. "We will tape the fingers so the stiff movements in the joints can be felt," she added.

Some students will be placed in wheelchairs for a couple of hours. They will return to CC 101 to share their experiences and conflicts that confronted them during their day.

Art created by handicapped persons will be on display during an art fair. The art will be judged by CCC art instructors Monday.

Handicapped artists include:

Jenny Uhrig has multiple sclerosis and paints with her teeth. Uhrig refers to her work as "her amazing pictures."

Russell Childers who is deaf will be on campus displaying his woodcarvings. Mary Walbert who is blind, will give a presentation on macrame.

An art awards ceremony will take place Tuesday in the Fireside Lounge at 1:30 p.m. for the artists participating in the art fair.

The development of careers for the handicapped will be discussed on Wednesday. Education Specialist Marilyn Johnston will be speaking on Career Development from 9:30 to 11:00 followed by Richard Pemintal who will speak on the Job Market for the Disabled. "It will be a day and a time for people to learn how to help a handicapped student to plan a career," Bennett said.

"We have many handicapped students who are going into vocational education," she stated. "Many have had a previous job and then an accident. Now they are learning to adjust and cope. In the Resource Center we work one on one," Bennett said. There is nothing that they cannot do as long as there is a realistic goal involved."

Thursday will be a sports activity day including a wheelchair basketball game at 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. in Randall gym. The Wheelblazers will compete against the Rolling Rebels. "We will even put the administrators in the chairs so they can fill in the gaps," Bennett said.

Friday is the testing day to see how many buildings are accessible for handicapped persons.

A Fun Run has been scheduled on Saturday at the College track. Registration begins at 9 a.m. There is a $6 entry fee for all runners involved.

The proceeds will go toward the purchase of a TTD visual telephone, for the Handicapped Resource Center.

The typing-machine telephone, has a screen and prints words for the deaf listener.
