

Prexy screening to begin

There is also a possibility that Fitzwater, under approval of the Board, may select a group of professionals to pre-screen applications (should there be an overabundance submitted) down to a workable number for the screening committee and Board to work with. All completed applications would still be available for the screening committee to see, however.

Nevertheless, Turpin said the committee should do more than just look over resumes. "The committee will be doing the same job that one person could do," he said.

Turpin added he would like to become involved in the selection process by serving as an ex-official Board member, and he said the faculty may ask the Board for approval of or just invite the final candidates to talk on a voluntary basis with them, "so the faculty has an idea and the senate does too" of what the candidates are like.

"I think their decision to organize the committee as it has will put an extreme burden on the Board," Kit Youngren, continuing education director and spokesperson for the administrative group said.

Youngren added he applauds the Board for taking on the responsibility of interviewing the candidates, which he anticipates will put a lot of work on the Board members. "That's quite an undertaking," he said.

The administration group had asked the Board for more representation on the screening committee, but since the Board has chosen to do the interviewing Youngren said that one administrative representative would be satisfactory. "I'm sure whoever we pick will be able to adequately represent us," he said.

"At least they're (Board) putting forth an effort; we're (ASG) glad we're having an input," newly-appointed ASG President Shawnee Christensen said.

Christensen explained that the ASG originally proposed to have more student representation because they wanted to be treated equally with the faculty, administrative and classified groups. "We (students) felt we were important enough to be considered equally," she said.

In reviewing the makeup of the screening committee, Christensen said she felt that all groups were treated equally by the Board.

"We're pleased," was the response given by Kevin Forney on behalf of the classified members. Forney explained that the Board suggested the addition of a classified representative for a total of two on the committee, instead of just having one like the classified group originally recommended.

"When they (the Board) offered another spot we (classified) were more than welcome to take it," he said. Although Forney had not originally intended to serve on the screening committee, he decided to participate by filling the additional spot. "We thank the Board for that opportunity," he added.

Once all the screening committee positions are filled, the group will meet with Fitzwater to discuss the ground rules of the selection process. All candidates' files will be kept in the College's Personnel Office and times will be arranged for committee members to come in at their convenience to look through them.

Eventually the committee members will meet again, toward the end of February, to recommend between 10-12 finalists to the Board. It is hoped that by April 1 a contract will be offered for the next president.
