Three named to foundation

Three new members have been elected to serve on the Clackamas Community College Foundation Board of Directors.

Elected to three-year terms were Ken Fosheim, director of the Clackamas Challenge Center in Oregon City; Marilyn McCallister, executive director of the Clackamas county Medical Association and Helen Brennan, owner of the New Life Natural Foods Store in Canby.

The Foundation is a non-profit organization that provides financial and community service support to the College. There are currently 17 members on the governing board.

Values class to be offered

A seminar for women who wish to build confidence through values clarification, goal setting and coping with perfectionism will be offered on campus Feb. 23.

Available through Women's Programs, "Keys To Confidence" will be from 9 a.m. to noon in the College's Small Dining Room in the Community Center. There will be a $5 fee.

For more information about the seminar, call 657-8400, ext. 208.

Free bluegrass concert slated

Music students at Clackamas Community College will mark the end of the winter term with two free concerts.

"Cabin Fever" is billed as "The College's own country, folk, and bluegrass band," will be featured Saturday

February 23, at the Sunset Fire Hall in West Linn and Saturday, March 9, in the Community Center Mall at the College.

Tax help available

Free income tax assistance is currently available for those who meet eligibility requirements at the Oregon City Senior Center at 615 Fifth St.

Help is provided for low-income, elderly, non-English speaking and disadvantaged taxpayers who can't afford private help with the preparation of their tax returns.

In addition, people that have income under $10,000 and qualify for the refundable Earned Income Credit can have their returns prepared by volunteers.

Volunteers are made up of people that have received training from the Internal Revenue Service and the Oregon Department of Revenue.

Those interested in the assistance can call 657-8287 for more information. The help is by appointment only unless otherwise noted.

Women's car seminar slated

Practical hands-on training in basic techniques of preventive maintenance for a more reliable car, savings and personal independence will be offered Feb. 21 and 28 for women at Clackamas Community College.

Auto Maintenance For Women will be held from 7-10 p.m. in the Barlow Auto Shop. A $10 fee is included for each session.

For more information, call 657-8400, ext. 208. The class is a part of the College's focus programs.

Hospital to offer classes orientation toward accident prevention.

Participants will learn all the basics of emergency first aid, such as heart attack and stroke treatment, emergency rescue and carrying the first aid for shock, to name a few.

Films, instructor-led practice sessions and a first aid workbook which participants keep after the session make up the course outline. The classes are taught by Red Cross-certified instructors and all participants receive a card indicating that they have received instruction and are certified to administer first aid.

For more information or to pre-register, call Community Education at 656-1631, ext. 3431.

cedures; but Krumm said the amount needed to obtain accreditation would be closer to $20,000 now. "We're looking at more than just a one-year process (in obtaining accreditation)," she said.

When asked why the College's administration has never been supportive of seeking the accreditation until now, Krumm said that "it's been the philosophy of community college presidents that outside accrediting bodies provide another hurdle" for the individual schools to deal with.

She explained that most of the colleges want more control over the accrediting process.

In response to the same question, Dean of Instruction Lyle Reese, who is also serving as interim president for the College until a new president is chosen, said that "most of the community college presidents have opposed an outside accrediting process because they already go through it" with the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges.

Reese said this regional association is the College's "number one accrediting association." He added there are similar associations located in other regions of the country. He explained that since accreditation is obtained through the northwest association, community college's administrations have questioned why they should take on an additional accreditation at great cost to their individual institutions.
