Job Center aids students

By Loretta Carter

Did you know there is a place on campus, that has a very well-rounded, comfortable atmosphere, with people willing to help anytime? This place also has a computer, catalogs, and pamphlets to assist you in charting your career future. The place is the Career Development and Placement Center.

Marv Thornley, the Center's director, is "willing to help" in any way possible. Thornley has been involved in the Center for ten years. Also working with Thornley is Kate Adams, job placement specialist. She has been in the Center for twelve years.

Other staff persons include,

Sheri Schoenborn, secretary and JoAnn Truesdell, career development specialist. Truesdell started in her position this October.

The Center also coordinates the work study program.

The purpose of the Career Center is to help students or the public to learn how to get a job through resumes, job applications, and by teaching them to be assertive. They also advise students about what types of jobs will suit them best.

The staff can help with self-assessment programs and a Career Exploration computer program, which lists what types of occupations are available, hiring requirements and training programs.

The third step in this program is the Job Search. This area helps the client develop skills in how to look for a job, write a resume, or fill out an application. Also, students can undergo mock interviews which teach students how to keep a job and how to advance in one's chosen field.

In addition, the Career Center works with the State Employment Office in Oregon City. SEO Representative Jane Zimmerman is in the office from 8 a.m. to noon on weekdays.

The center is open to all students and the community.

Auto shop services vehicles at low cost

By Toni Madsen

The auto mechanics and auto body shop at the College, nationally recognized by the Automobile Association of America as a model program, have started what hopes to be another successful year. The department uses vehicles from the general public to do minor and major service work, which familiarizes and educates students to a wide variety of problems and cars.

The only cost to the car owners for the work is parts purchased by the department for your car.

"I feel it's an excellent program. We're keeping current with industry standards," commented Ray Conklin, auto mechanics instructor.

The time each job takes will vary according to the particular problem with the car, and the auto class schedule. Conklin noted that there are no written guarantees for the work, but if a problem should arise, the department asks that you return the vehicle for correction of the problem. "We do not want any customers to go away unsatisfied," Conklin stated.

Play season debuts with 'Increased Difficulty'

By Erik Conrad

Eduard Huml is in trouble--too many things are going on in his life. It's getting to the point where he can't even think. To add to all his problems, he develops an increased difficulty of concentration and gets involved in situations which are nothing but humorous.

"The Increased Difficulty of Concentration" kicks off the play season at the College in early December. Performance dates are set for Dec. 5-7, 13 and 14 at 8 p.m. and Dec. 15 at 2:30 p.m. in the McLoughlin Theater.

The play centers around Dr. Eduard Huml, a professor of social science who begins to have trouble separating the different facets of his life. As Dr. Huml's trouble begins, a team of scientists initiate a computer-aided psychological profile of Dr. Huml. The assisting piece of machinery is named Puzuk, which has a mind of its own--and an unfortunate temperment.

The play follows Dr. Huml and his escapades as the different parts of his life come crashing together.

Jack Shields, the play's director, explained that "It is a treatise on the complexity of life. It is confused. It is also hysterically funny."

"The Increased Difficulty of Concentration" was selected from a group of four plays which were voted upon by the group of students auditioning and by Shields.

When asked about his outlook on the production, Shields said, "Bright, very bright."

He said he was pleased with the cast, commenting "It's a very strong cast with a lot of solid experience behind it."
