

Creative design from art center

By Amy Doane
Staff Writer

A sense of creativity and imagination could have described the atmosphere that took place in the Art Center last week as art instructor Rick True's Basic Design class introduced their quarterly Design Art Show. The show, however, will carry over until this Friday, November 22, so there's still time to catch it.

The Art show, sponsored by the Creative Art Society and Dan Schaefer, president of the Creative Art Society, includes work done by the students in the Basic Design class which displays skills learned thus far.

Much of the work displayed involves the use of creating a module effect in order to cause a bigger illusion to the viewer. The student combines this effect by using art designs which involve the use of perspective.

Black and white are the predominant colors of these designs.

The art show is held every term which enables the students to display their artwork. Color will be the theme next term which will be followed by three dimension in the spring.

"Design has something to do in every piece of art," explained Schaefer. "Design is mainly putting things on paper to create an emotional effect."

Basic Design Class involves composition, contrast, negative and positive spaces, and texture.

"They (the students) learn to combine these things for tools in later art," commented Schaefer.

Schaefer also expressed the usefulness and place design has in architecture, photography, commercial art, graphic art, all types of fine art, as well as interior design.

"The class is great, and the instructor leaves the class fairly well open for the students," Schaefer expressed.

A few of the artist whose work are entered in the show include Mary Saalfeld, Shallow Herbst, Shirley Frenz, "Birdie" Bailey, and K. Kasper.

The show is open to the public.

Artist shows the world from a different point of view with design show submission.

Visual arts gain patrons

By Thad Kreisher
Arts Editor

"If you're interested in the visual arts and in becoming a more creative person, then this organization is for you," says Creative Arts Society President Dan Schaefer.

The Creative Arts Society, an organization began last year, has returned for the 1985-86 year.

Schaefer explains that the society is an organization of artists and art enthusiasts who are trying to generate public interest in art and to give them a chance to experience the many different visual art forms.

"We support all forms of visual art, painting, photography, sculpture, drawing, graphic arts, and so on," says Schaefer. "We don't have any photographers right now, but we will be encouraging them to join."

Past accomplishments of the society include the "Boats and Canoes" exhibit earlier this year, the Design show, currently running, and the creativity workshop last year. The workshop was taught by John Orelle, and was designed to "enlighten the artist, to motivate and harness new facets of his creativity." According to Schaefer, the workshop was such a success and they plan to hold another this year.

The creative arts society is an independent campus organization. Schaefer says, "We're not a club really. We're a society of artists encouraging each other in creative endeavors. I think that we could co-exist with the college just fine as a campus club, and we are exploring that possibility."

There are really no requirements to join the Society. An individual need only have an interest in the visual arts and go to the meetings to become a member.

Schaefer comments that there are many advantages to being a member. "(Those who join) get support and have their works displayed. We get shows organized, we get our members' work shown, and we organize various work shops."

He lists the immediate goals of the society as becoming more established, and to develop a consistent format for producing art shows.

Schaefer says, "We'd like to see anyone interested get in touch with us." The Creative Arts Society meets every other Wednesday in AC 10 at noon. The next meeting is scheduled for Nov. 20.

Creative Arts Society President Dan Schaefer at work in his natural environment.

Tues., Nov. 19

Breaded Veal w/Whipped Potatoes $1.75 Norm's

Wed., Nov. 20

Turkey Pot Pie $1.75

Specials

at your cafeteria

Thurs., Nov. 21

German Style Beef Short Ribs w/Baked Potatoes $1.75

Fri., Nov. 22

Ham and Scalloped Potatoes $1.75

Mon., Nov. 25

Tacos $.65

