NFL draft: 1987

Probably the second-most important day in professional football occurred recently. The National Football League's annual college draft took place.

It's no surprise that the Tampa Bay Buccaneers snagged Vinny Testaverde faster than Jim Bakker could meet with Jessica Hahn, but there were some surprises in the draft.

One of the most surprising, and unintelligent picks came from the Super Bowl 20 champion Chicago Bears, who selected Michigan quarterback Jim Harbaugh. Wait a minute, how many quarterbacks does Chicago have now? Jim McMahon, Doug Flutie, Mike Tomczak, Steve Fuller, and now Harbaugh. I guess there's nothing better than depth to the Bears.

The defending NFL champion New York Giants made a strong showing in the draft even though they didn't need to. Three of their first four picks saw the Giants pick players that will fill their only weakness-wide receiver. Maybe it's me, but doesn't it seem like the strong teams just keep getting stronger?

This year's Giants remind me of the Los Angeles Lakers, who, year after year, seem to always hit the gold mine with some no-name who ends up becoming the hottest thing since the slam dunk.

This year 335 players were taken in the 12 round draft, of those 172 were offensive, 153 defensive, and 10 were special team (punts, kickoffs, field goals) players.

In other sports action During the past week...an exit from the playoffs was provided for the Portland Trailblazers by The Houston Rockets. It took Houston three wins (one at Memorial Coliseum) to advance to the western conference semifinal round against the Seattle SuperSonics.

Leonard-Hagler: Analysis

Sugar Ray Leonard pulled off the impossible last month, coming off a three-year vacation to defeat middleweight champion, Marvin Hagler, in a 12 round split-decision at Las Vegas. The Leonard glitter hovered over a win that still won't secure Ray a place in boxing lore, simply because the victory came so cheap.

Leonard knows how to sway a crowd. America's darling boxer since the '76 Olympics, he benefitted once again from his aura of charisma and confidence. Even though boxing experts know this is a show, it works. He used his two favorite tactics versus Hagler; the bolo punch and the shuffle. Both created a false sense of superiority, making it appear that whatever was happening inside the ring, Ray was in control.

Even more clever that Ray's showy arsenal was the way he turned the fight into a scoring match. Knowing full well that Hagler could go inside and knock him out, Leonard would pull Hagler's head down and tie him up whenever Hagler got inside, much in the same manner Ali did to Frazier. Even though this tactic is considered sidereal smart, it was unfair to Hagler, ad were the two times Leonard hit low and the three times he hit considerably after the bell.

Leonard benefitted from Hagler's weak strategy. Hagler backed Leonard into a corner several times, but didn't finish him off. Each time Leonard would slap his way out of the corner as if Hagler were trying to steal his $11 million purse. This was not a great fight, with neither man appearing to work any harder than Wayne Newton at the Sahara. But Leonard did win the fight by a point, on the strength of his blurring flurries in the eleventh round. It should have gone fifteen.

Win a rafting trip

Here's an exclusive contest for readers of The Print. The following are 10 questions about sports. Answer them the best you can and turn them in at Trailer B (just north of Randall Hall). Of all the entries received, the one with the best score will be the winner. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen by a drawing of all entries that tied.
