Curran's Corner

by Christopher Curran
Sports Editor

Let's call it a year

Let me start off by saying, this has been one of the most enjoyable school years that I've ever had.

What now, you're saying. I'm going to get mad at something and rat on it throughout the whole article.

Well you are wrong.

This week, being our last, I'm going to take a look at the year in review of the sports section.

There is probably nowhere else you could find a sports editor curled up sleeping on the couch in his office when at his 2 p.m. interview walked in with three staff members. If you looked in another place you would have trouble finding the sports editor getting up at 6 a.m., going to work, leaving work, and arriving at paste-up less than 15 minutes before it started at 3 p.m. I produced five pages of sports that week.

Over the year I've done my best work under the higher amounts of pressure. Possibly the toughest week I had was in winter term when we were working on the March 4 issue. The whole paper was in massive chaos.

During that week, the men's basketball team won the northwest regional championship, the wrestling team won second at the nationals, Norm Berney was named junior college wrestling coach of the year, two wrestlers turned in first place performances, the women's basketball team had completed their season, the track and softball teams were getting set for their season, Cougar basketball star Pete Newlin was at the peak of the season, I was trying to get the scoreboard intact, and Curran's Corner was examining the word "we." On top of that I had a full week at work.

This issue was a far cry from the first issue when I had a cross country story and an informative article about intramurals.

Fall term was a new and at times a frustrating experience. During that time I produced nine pages of sports in eight publications. During that term I did receive help from a work study student, a first year reporting student, and I even published a story from a member of the men's basketball team.

In that term stories that were printed in the sports section included the cross country team's season, the volleyball team's season, the Clackamas bowling team, two shots at a weekly column (Over the Underground), intramurals, and even a couple of personality profiles.

During winter term I got more help, but I was still writing almost half of the sports section. Some of that help during winter term came from former Photo Editor Lyn Marie Thompson and a girl from the Reporting II class who is still writing sports for the section Sherri Michaels.

In that term we expanded from the nine pages of fall to 14 pages in seven papers. In the term we expanded in other ways also. I added a scoreboard of not only games, but standings as well. The whole paper was doing better winter term. We produced the first 12 and 16 page papers in years for Clackamas.

All of that work during winter took its toll on me. I started to feel the mid-year burnout (a little late). As this was happening, I came back from a not so relaxing spring vacation ready to take on the largest term of the year: spring. We were planning to publish 10 issues that term.

As I walked around the first day of the spring term publications class wondering how I was going to make it through another 10 issues, an elderly (I joke with him on his mid 30's age compared to my 19 years of existence) gentleman walked up and asked me if it would be alright if he did some sports writing. What could I have said, but "write as many stories as you want." And now from seeing his material I realize that the only decision I could make was a good one (Steven Ziolkowski will be happy to see this).

After that I received the name of another person who was an experienced writer and who had a story printed in The Oregonian. Shortly thereafter, Jerry Ulmer became the sports section's second columnist.

I've tried to make sure everything has been covered this year, and at times we didn't, but I think for the most part, we have done a better job than I thought was capable of being done in the first place. In total there have been about 20 different sports writers, and I personally want to thank them for their contributions. Other specific thanks I must give are to:

1. and 2. Both photo editors, Lyn Marie Thompson and Beth Coffey for putting up with the constant question, "Do you have those sports photos yet?"

3. Our advisor, Linda Vogel, who, when I was first named Sports Editor, helped me find the athletic offices.

4. Our typesetter Crystal Penner for answering my questions "Is this possible?" and "Can that be done?"

5. The rest of the staff for putting up with a gloating sports editor in times when we had a 12 page paper, and there were six pages of sports and there were eight page papers when offered to do four or five pages.

6. A special thanks to those people who helped me at times in which I have been ready to just walk away from the paper and not look back.

The Print will be different next year. Most of the staff will be gone. There are a few of those that will still be here. I will be back in a dual role as both Design Editor and Sports Editor and I'll bring Curran's Corner with me.

As a closing comment I don't want to get too personal, but would just like to say it's been real, it's been fun, and contrary to the joke, it has been real fun.

It seems like I was always doing some kind of writing this year.
