Controversy follows ex ASG official

by Heleen Veenstra
Editor

Becky Hostetler, former vice president of Student Government, resigned from office July 2, 1987, following continued conflict with other ASG members.

Hostetler expressed she was forced out by the executive cabinet consisting of Neale Frothingham, ASG president; Dana Dumolt, former assistant to the president and currently vice president; B.J. Blumenkron, entertainment officer; Ann Haller, former administrative assistant, and currently assistant to the president.

The executive cabinet asked Hostetler to resign based on the following concerns as stated in a memo by Frothingham: irresponsibility, unreliability, not being dependable, and lack of academic study.

Hostetler is angry about these charges, "I fulfilled my job to what it was in the commitment. I didn't fulfill my job to Neale's standards...my standards and priorities are different than theirs (executive cabinet)."

Before Hostetler resigned a few meetings were held to find a solution to the problems. "I felt saying I was sorry was the only way to stay vice president. I didn't feel what I did was wrong. To stay in office I felt I had to rearrange my priorities," Hostetler said.

However, due to credit requirements, Hostetler would have been removed from office if she hadn't resigned. The Student Government constitution says, "an official must complete a minimum of three credits in order to appeal." Hostetler completed two credits during spring term, which gave her no rights to appeal.

"I just wish that the communication would have been better...only being one side of the coin I couldn't change it," Frothingham said to explain his feeling that this was a communications gap.

Hostetler doesn't have a position at ASG, but still helps out as a volunteer. "Neale had said at the time that I wouldn't make a good officer, but a good senator. That proves my whole point. As senator I only could help out," Hostetler concluded. "She has skills to do the job of a senator, but can't be a constructive member of the cabinet," Frothingham said.

by Sherri Michaels
News Editor

Kristine Gebbie, Administrator of Oregon State Health Division will be speaking about women and healthcare: Where do we go from here at the '80's Issues Breakfast on campus Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Gebbie was billed by the Oregonian, Mar. 29, 1987, as having "built a reputation as a take-charge leader, one who is not shy about voicing her opinions or slow to make a decision." Gebbie will do just that when she speaks on topics from the most pressing healthcare issues for women, to the changes in health education/legislation and how they affect women, to AIDS and the single female. She will cover these and many other vital questions about women and healthcare next Tuesday at the 7:30 a.m. breakfast in the small dining room. Cost is $4.50, which includes breakfast.

The Focus on Women program, which is sponsoring this and several other events wants to "emphasize being in touch with current issues that affect women, and give women the chance to meet with current women leaders," according to committee member Bernie Nolan.

The Focus on Women programs are designed for women from the community, staff and student populations.

Along with the '80's Issues Breakfast there is a brown bag lunch series that will feature Sharon Hartsell for the first session, Oct. 8, 12:30-1:30 p.m. Hartsell will be covering "Time Management for Women" which will focus on issues and techniques for women students and staff who would like to manage their time, not have time manage them. The session will be held in CC101.

Parking fees elevated

by E.A. Berg
Staff Writer

Associated Student Government approved a proposal to increase fines for college parking violations from $3.00 to $5.00.

"The increase is necessary to increase the Student Emergency Loan Fund," said Neale Frothingham, ASG President. One-half of all revenue raised from parking citations goes into the fund.

The increase must be approved by the Motor Vehicle Regulations

Committee, composed of three students and three staff members.

The Student Emergency Loan Fund is currently approximately $8,500, according to Kathleen Scheer, Financial Aid Coordinator.

As of Oct. 2, 48 students have borrowed from the fund this term, mostly to purchase text books, said Scheer. The maximum amount loaned is $50. Scheer said because the proposed parking fine increase is an ASG matter, she would not comment on the proposal.
