Football needed at Clackamas

As winter arrives and Christmas gets closer, it becomes football season. The college bowl games start in a couple of weeks and last until January. The NFL playoff will soon be upon us, and then of course in January comes the big one, the Super Bowl to end the football season.

The only problem with football season is not the number of games or the length of the season. The problem that I think should be dealt with by us first is the lack of a football program at Clackamas Community College.

The last season Clackamas fielded a football team was in 1978 under head coach Bill Hargadine. Athletic director Dale McGriff held the head coaching reins from 1974 through 1977, and posted a 6-3-1 record in 1976, and a 14-14-1 record is his three year tenure a coach for the Cougars.

The Cougars played in an independent league, so they were not able to go to the playoffs, but they did finish second in the league. The Cougars played their home games where the soccer field is now, on Saturday afternoon, and received surprisingly good support, drawing over 750 people a game.

Mt. Hood and Clatsop Community Colleges with football programs, but soon dropped their football programs after Clackamas dropped theirs. Since there were only two teams in Oregon for the Cougars to play, this meant a lot of travel for Clackamas, but the cost of a football team per player compared to some of the other sports currently here at Clackamas proves that financially a football team here would be feasible.

With the amount of good high school football players in the state, the major colleges just can't handle all of them. A community college would increase in enrollment and a good high school player would be able to carry his skills and dreams farther by coming to a two year school for the first two years. In fact 60-75 young men would benefit, as this is the amount of players that would be able to play football after high school, and receive financial help while doing it.

Clackamas football ended after the 1978 season for political reasons, not for financial reasons. Let's apply some pressure to the administration here at Clackamas to bring back football, and show them that a lot of us do want to support our college football team; we don't want to watch, and cheer for some other college team Saturday on TV.

Talk coming out of Mt. Hood Community College is that they are very close to getting football back. Maybe if they do, some people here at Clackamas will see the light, and follow suit and do the same.

But let's not wait for what Mt. Hood might do. Let the administration know that we want football back, and we're not going to be satisfied until we get it.

Turkey trot awards prizes

Turkey trotters turned out in droves for the annual Clackamas Community College five kilometer race. Individual men's first place went to Alan Knoop who ran a breath taking 14 minutes, 44.7 seconds. Individual woman's place went to Mary Grout, flying in at 22:25.5.

Rich Milbradt came within 13 seconds of his predicted time at 15:57.8 and Dian Connett tied within 13 seconds of her prediction at 23:13 even. In the predicted women's walk Terri Meininger came within 14 seconds of her predicted time at 30:14.8. Bruce Poulin led the men's predicted walk with a 2:42 difference at 26:08.4.

Trotters were not permitted to wear watches as they circled the campus twice, starting and finishing at Randall Gymnasium. Runners and walkers alike gathered in the corridors during pre-race time. Frank Harlow took first place for most creative head gear. Just prior to the race he returned to the locker room for socks to keep his hands warm.

Best team predicted went to the "Misfits" whose predictions were within 2 minutes and 6 seconds of actual times.

Team members were Norm

Berney, 21:49.8 with a predicted 20:58 and a 51 second difference; Mike Brady, at 22:30.9 with a prediction of 23:30 and a 30 second difference; David Dickson running an 18:44.3 with a predicted 20:00 and a difference of 1:16; Dena Dumolt, 21:40 even with an 18:00 prediction and a 3:40 difference; and Paul Kylo at 28:03.9. Total team prediction was 110 minutes.

Team members were awarded pumpkin pies for coming in closest to their predicted times. Individual runners placing first in men's and women's and best predicted individual times for men's and women's walkers and runners received turkeys.
