

Library remodeled but still in transition

Library looks forward to more changes.

Changes have been made at the library. During Christmas break, Clackamas library was both remodeled and rearranged.

An addition of a new carpet and the removal of a wall have altered both the appearance and the amount of space available.

Changes were made, according to head librarian Valerie McQuaid, because "we know we're going to be here for several years. The new building won't be built for several years, five at least." She also pointed out that the old library had "zero maximum efficiency."

Coming in through the gate the new location of the reference librarian's desk is first seen. McQuaid mentioned that this is to increase his availability to students and that it is a definite improvement from his previous "obscure location."

The wall on the east end has been removed and now opens onto the periodical back issues of the last two years. Older periodicals have been put on microfilm and microfiche. Microfilm and fiche are now no longer stored in a small room in the back of library but are located in green and black filing cabinets by the back issues.

Paperbacks have been moved from the front of the circulation desk to the current periodical area. Records are now by the back wall located in middle of the regular circulation books.

Finding regular circulations books may now be easier with the books going from A to Z instead of the previous Z to A.

In the northwest corner of the left of circulation books, law books are now stored. In the opposing corner pamphlet materials are now stored where the reference desk used to be.

Other changes are still to be made. "I compare this to Mount St. Helens," McQuaid said, "after the initial eruption, there was still aftershocks." McQuaid also mentioned that "the whole staff encourages everyone to come in and check out lots of materials."
