

Smoking inappropriate inside Randall Hall

It's about time someone took it upon themselves to do something about the smoking problem in Randall Hall. Bryan Schiller should be congratulated for initiating it.

Smokers say that the college is trying to eliminate, one by one, all the smoking areas on the Clackamas Community College campus. This is beside the point. Schiller, a member of Clackamas' wrestling team, is speaking for the majority of the athletes who must walk through Randall Hall to get from the locker room to the gym and back again. If there are to be smoking areas on campus, then there are better places to have them than in the athletic building.

The mere fact that these people are athletes suggests that they are intent about keeping their bodies healthy, which cigarette smoke, first or second hand, hinders. The last thing these athletes need after an exhausting practice or a demanding game is to leave the gym and be bombarded by the odor of cigarette smoke.

Non-smokers should observe the rights of smokers and that they need a place (indoors) to do that activity. At the same time, smokers need to understand that there are some places that are just not appropriate smoking areas. Randall Hall is one of those inappropriate smoking areas.

Smokers are also concerned about there being nowhere else to smoke if smoking is banned. This is false. The Barlow lounge upstairs and the smoking section in Norm's Cafe in the Community Center, just to mention two places, are rarely filled to capacity at the same time and still provide a relaxed atmosphere where smokers can smoke, talk and study.

It's time now for Associated Student Government President Faith Taylor to help move the petition through proper channels. This is an important issue and an official policy, one way or another, should be established as soon as possible.

Driveway needs solution

Originally the Tri Met bus turnaround was scheduled to be completed by Oct. 15 of this year.

Then, we hear it will be done Nov. 4.

Alas, it is now Nov. 23 and the turnaround is not finished.

Such is the case with another Clackamas Community College project. We're told that it must be dry and 70 degrees out before the second layer of asphalt can be poured.

I think the pertinent question here is, if the college and/or the construction company knew that completion of the turnaround was going to require specific weather conditions that did not include rain, then why didn't they plan accordingly?

Given the weather in this area, a completion date sometime in early March seems realistic. Until the turnaround is completed, there should be something done to the "temporary" bus stop which is located north of McLoughlin Hall.

There should be some kind of "temporary" shelter built for this "temporary" area for this "temporary" amount of time.

Since adverse weather is already here, it makes sense to have some kind of small covered area in front of the stop. It wouldn't have to be anything big, just something to protect students from the wind and the rain for the duration of the time that the new bus turnaround remains unfinished.

The bus turnaround is just the latest in a series of Clackamas Community College bloopers.

Two years ago the college spent too much time and too much money (over $9 thousand) on the new logo, which, according to some opinions, lacks even the boredom of the previous logo.

At the beginning of last year the college suffered another major blunder as they had signs constructed identifying the college entrances. That was a good idea except for the fact that the signs were not big enough to be as effective as they could be.

I implore those in charge of this endeavor to get the ball rolling on either the finishing touches of the turnaround, or a shelter for the bus stop that is now being used.

Let's make sure the inconvenience to the students on this issue is, in fact, "temporary."

Student Opinions

What do you think of the outcome of the Presidential Election?

I firmly believe in being involved in the politics of our country. But, it seems that we are just voting for the lesser of two evils anymore.

Gail Clark

I really think that Reagan was a firm believer in doing for the people and making the world more peaceful. I think Bush will accomplish the same idea and principle. He will be good.
