

Student wins big

Mark Wieger said that he was "shocked" to hear that he had won the Oregon City Senior Center's contest.

Mark Wieger is $100 richer because of a homework assignment.

Around mid-October, the Oregon City Senior Center sponsored a contest for a new logo. This contest was open to the public. Kevin Forney, commercial art instructor, decided to turn the contest into a class project. All of the students in the class submitted an entry and Wieger was the winner.

Wieger found out that he'd won the contest, "about four days after everyone else did." He had missed class the day that Forney announced the winner, and a few days later a fellow student congratulated him on winning. "I didn't believe him," stated Wieger.

When asked how he felt about winning, Wieger responded, "I was shocked... completely amazed... because I felt there were a lot of good designs just from our class."

"I was trying to find a few things that symbolized the Senior Center. I thought that unity and freedom were good symbols," Wieger remarked.

He stated that he wanted to "keep it simple," so that it could be, "recognized easily and be reduced without distortion."

In the design, "the intertwining letters represent unity and the bird stands for freedom," explained Wieger.

'Rainman' worth seeing

by Rick Piller
Staff Writer

Rainman is a movie that takes both actors and audience on a journey. It moves from Cincinnati to Los Angeles, with a few stops for self-examination along the way. Barry Levinson (Good Morning Vietnam, The Natural) came on with two weeks notice to direct Dustin Hoffman and Tom Cruise in some of the best acting this year.

Hoffman plays Raymond Babbitt, an autistic savant who has not been out of an institution since 1965. Autistics live in their own world, and are either unable to or have difficulty relating to the world outside their own thoughts. Dustin Hoffman delivers his best performance since Ishtar, and will get the nod for an Academy Award nomination.

Cruise plays Raymond's brother Charlie. He is an exotic car salesman and, similar to Raymond, is self absorbed. He has difficulty expressing his feelings toward others.

In pre-production the film probably looked as if it might not work. This may be the reason it had three directors and six writers before Levinson took over. He centers on the relationship between the two brothers and sends them and us through a pleasing chapter in their lives. As they move along the road toward Los Angeles they inadvertently teach each other how to express their feelings. It is ironic that they opened up in Las Vegas, the capitol of fantasy life. I suggest that if you have not already seen the movie please go. You will have a very enjoyable time.

Scotland native prefers USA

Hendrea Ferguson is just like any other student attending Clackamas except for one small twist.

She lived in Glenrothe Fife, Scotland until the last nine years of her life.

"My husband Brian's job in electronics brought us over to California. Later he traveled to Portland and loved it. He came home and said when he had a chance he wanted to move up here and here we are," stated Ferguson.

They now reside in West Linn with their two sons Brian Jr., 9, and Michael, 7.

Ferguson is an English major and hopes to be able to teach. A smile crosses her face when she speaks of teaching.

"I volunteered as an aide in my son's school. I enjoyed the reading part of it. It is exciting to see a child begin to read and understand," said Ferguson.

She likes Scotland and misses her family. But she is happy with her life in Portland and wouldn't choose to live in Scotland again.

"It is different here. Who you are depends on what you do with your life. The class system is very entrenched over there which is fine if you don't mind the position that you are in," explained Ferguson.

Besides family, one other thing is missing here.

"It is January and a good haggis can't be found," laughed Ferguson. A haggis, Ferguson explained, is a food unique to Scotland and is made by mixing together and cooking what is left after a sheep is slaughtered.

FOREVER YOUNG.

Most of us don't think about dying. It seems like we'll stay young forever. And some of us do: drinking and driving is the number one killer of people under 25.

But if the thought of dying doesn't stop you from drinking and driving, think about losing your license instead. Because you will. Oregon has tough drinking and driving laws. And they just keep getting tougher. You'll lose your license for at least 90 days. Automatically. Immediately. It will seem like forever.

If you drink and drive, the least you'll lose is your license. Guaranteed.
