'Festivities' set

Senior adults in Clackamas County are invited to attend a free Holiday Dance Monday, Dec. 13, at 8 p.m. in the Community Center Mall at Clackamas Community College.

The festivities, featuring a dance band and entertainment, are being sponsored by the Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) Advisory Council.

Refreshments will be available and the evening promises to be dotted with surprises.

If transportation is needed by anyone wishing to attend, or if anyone would like to suggest activities for the evening they can call the RSVP office 656-2631, ext. 317.

Bazaar turnout low

On the weekend of Nov. 20-21, the Christmas Bazaar held at Clackamas Community College resulted in a disappointing turnout.

The entire bazaar grossed only a total of $225, $100 of which covered admission fees. Last spring's bazaar at CCC had total earnings of $1800.00. The admissions total for the previous bazaar was $538.00.

ASG members

display 'ears'

The Nov. 18 Clackamas Community College Associated Student Government meeting was only missing one thing -- cheese.

Four of the ASG members came to the meeting outfitted in Mickey Mouse ears. Although some people may have thought they were promoting a Mickey Mouse Club most people realized that they were just airing their opinions of the meetings.

The ASG senators expressed interest in hearing any response that students have to the campus TV newscasting program. Campus news is currently being shown at five minutes before the hour from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. daily.

ASG accepted the rifle and pistol club constitution and will vote on the rodeo club constitution at their next meeting.

The next ASG meeting will be held Dec. 2 at 11 a.m. in the Fireside Lounge in the Community Center.

Bookstore readies

for winter term

Within two weeks the Clackamas Community College bookstore will post the list of instructors' courses and required textbooks for winter term.

Jean Albright, CCC bookstore employee, said that although no classes will be held during Christmas vacation (Dec. 20 through 31) the bookstore will remain open for students wishing to buy books and supplies for winter term.

The bookstore "buy back" will be Dec. 13 through Dec. 31 for students wanting to sell their fall textbooks to the bookstore.

Toxic water dormant

On the Clackamas Community College Campus, between Barlow and Randall Halls, is a large fountain of toxic water.

This "toxic fountain" is really a cooling tower for the air conditioners in all the main buildings.

The water isn't really fatally toxic, it just has some corrosion reducer which makes the water discolored -- and unhealthy.

The cooling tower was designed by the architects who designed CCC, and was constructed at the same time as Barlow Hall. Various scenes engraved on the tower depict state and local history. The art work was pre-casted, and designed by CCC students.

The fountain is now dry because winter temperatures don't create much of a demand for air conditioning.

Uris maps out winter term course

Joe Uris, Clackamas Community College Grants Director, will teach a class in Cultural History in fall term.

Uris' new class is to be "a series dealing with basically fun subjects," Uris said that the areas he hoped to cover include comic books, movies, television, radio. He also plans to study Burlesque, Vaudeville. Methods of study will include movie or T.V. show every class period.

The class will entail a lot of reading, Uris. One of the texts will be "The Key" by Dashill Hammet (author of Maltese Falcon), a novel of political fiction in the 1920's. Two other novels will be read are "Trilogy U.S.A." by Posas and a World War Two novel "The Naked and the Dead" by Mailer. Uris will also deal with the sequences and impact of the invention of the automobile.

Generally, the class will be a study of ordinary people and their habits and since that is where the real culture of America resides, said Uris.
