Textbook refund

Friday, Jan. 21 is the date set for students who would like to receive full refunds on books purchased, but not needed for winter term. To receive a full refund the bookstore receipt must be brought to the bookstore with the book.

Doug Shannon, manager of the Clackamas Community College bookstore, said there has been some confusion between bookstore refund policies and bookstore buy-back policies. The refund is for books purchased, but not needed for class. The buy-back is for books used during winter term, but not wanted or needed after the term is over. The bookstore buy-back will begin in finals week of winter term.

Financial aid

Dick Thompson, director of Student Financial Aids at Clackamas Community College, will be offering three workshops next week to help students fill out the 1977-78 Financial Aid applications.

Each year students are faced with the task of filling out these forms to apply for grants, loans, and work-study programs and each year student applications are delayed, returned or rejected due to improper completion of the data by the student.

The workshops will be a line-by-line walk through the forms so that the student's application should be completed and ready for processing at the end of the session.

Since money for 77-78 is scarce, anybody remotely interested in financial aid for next year should attend one of the workshops. They will be held Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 24 and 25 in CC 101 at 3 p.m. and on Friday, Jan. 28 in CC 101 at 2:30 p.m.

Psychologist

For Clackamas Community College students or faculty members who have problems or personal concerns troubling them, there is qualified help available.

Dr. YeVonne Kimmitt is a psychologist from the Clackamas County Mental Health Center who comes to CCC twice a month, usually on Wednesday afternoons to provide counseling. "I hope that people will just drop in to find out what services are available here and at the clinic," said Kimmitt.

"Kimmitt is available to talk to anyone about personal problems such as anxiety, divorce, children, studying, or parents," said Mary Oldford of the counseling center.

Kimmitt's service is free to anyone at CCC. Everyone is welcome to drop in, but it is advisable to make an appointment with the counseling secretary. Exact dates of Kimmitt's coming to CCC will be announced in the Today bulletin. For more information contact Mary Oldford, ext. 266.

No school Friday

There will be no classes Friday, Jan. 21 at Clackamas Community College. Although students will enjoy their three-day weekend, the college staff will be hard at work discussing new developments in their respective fields and problems of the college in general.

The morning hours will be devoted to staff development activities including; discussions on the implications of architectural barriers for the handicapped, computer assisted instruction and visits to local high schools to discuss program planning.

The afternoon will be devoted to a collective bargaining workshop. Since all staff will be involved in this there will be no student services available.

Edit board

The Cougar Print announced organization of its editorial board for winter term last Monday, according to Randy Clark, journalism/publications adviser.

The editorial board meets once a week to discuss campus and community news coverage by the weekly CCC newspaper. It also helps to govern editorial policy.

Enrollment up

Enrollment this term at Clackamas Community College seems to have increased over winter term of 1976.

A first-day head count on Monday, Jan. 3, showed a result of 2,785 students, up 8.2 per cent over the total of 2,573 students for last year, but these numbers are deceiving.

A measurement of full time students was taken by a process called FTE (Full Time Equivalent) which is based on total credit hours instead of total number of students.

This measurement showed a one per cent decrease over winter term of last year.

Thus, in actuality, the number of part time students has increased, which accounts for the increased student population. Chuck Adams, Director of Admissions, estimates a total of 3,200 on-campus students of which 98 per cent are students. Also, 7,500 students is Adams' estimate for total winter term enrollment counting all students, on and off

Outdoor club

Persons with an itch to frolic in snow or traverse mountain trails have an outlet at Clackamas Community College.

The Outdoor Activities Club has recently been formed through Associated Students Government. "Getting people together to participate in outdoor activities and share their knowledge with others" is the purpose of the club according to the organization's constitution.

Membership is open to all staff and students at CCC as well as members of other families. The first outing will be a ski playday, tentatively scheduled for Friday, Jan. 21, which is a school holiday.

Interested persons can contact club organizer Pete Broers at 656-8865, or adviser, Biology instructor Ginny Weir at 656-2631, ext. 230.
