

Expanded curriculums seen for 77-78

A recent survey confirms need and interest. Clackamas Community College will offer new and expanded curriculums for 1977-78.

The changes in curriculum will be in the area of technical, mechanical and cultural programs.

Robert Bloomquist, chairman of the agricultural and industrial programs, said auto mechanics will be expanded considerably. "We will be adding a fifth quarter to the fourth quarter for the certificate program in auto mechanics," said Bloomquist. "This is due to the new developments, amount and variety of makes and models of automobiles today."

Bloomquist said a course in auto body repair will be added and time will be expanded in auto tune-up diagnosis.

Additional courses will also be added in air conditioning, heating, auxiliary systems and auto shop management to make it possible to receive an Associate Degree in auto mechanics.

Bloomquist said the industrial mobile hydraulics curriculum will also be expanded to provide the option of industrial maintenance technology.

This change will provide more instruction and training in automated machines with the courses in circuitry, digital electronics, computer fundamentals and application to trouble shooting in electrical-hydraulic systems.

Additional courses will be offered in agriculture and the area related to agribusiness curriculums.

Planning is in process to develop a curriculum in farm equipment mechanics, air conditioning and heating technology. A study is also being made of possibly developing a curriculum in viticulture, which is grape production and harvesting.

This is a field that is growing rapidly in Oregon and is showing considerable promise for farmers who are interested in expanding their fruit production in an area that is in considerable demand.

The survey mailed recently will determine if curriculums in farm equipment mechanics, heating technology, air conditioning and viticulture will be offered.

Bloomquist is also involved with an apprenticeship program and is trying to establish additional apprenticeship courses.

Marv Weiss named 'man of the year'

Clackamas Community College has hidden amongst its staff a valuable celebrity of community services and education.

Although he often goes without due recognition, Dr. Marvin Weiss, dean of community services and community education, has been honored with the "Man of the Year" award by the National Council on Community Services and Continuing Education (NCCSCE).

The award was presented in recognition of his service and leadership in forwarding the objectives of community education across the nation.

"The award was mainly based upon contributions of my doctoral research writings on local and national levels," said Weiss, a charter member of the NCCSCE since 1969.

Weiss has had several writings published including "Need For Cooperation," "Building Models for Cooperation" and "Roles of Community Education in College as well as in the School District."

"This award as well as the growing achievements of community services and education in the CCC district wouldn't have been possible without the financial support and commitment of the president of CCC, John Hakanson, and the school board," said Weiss.

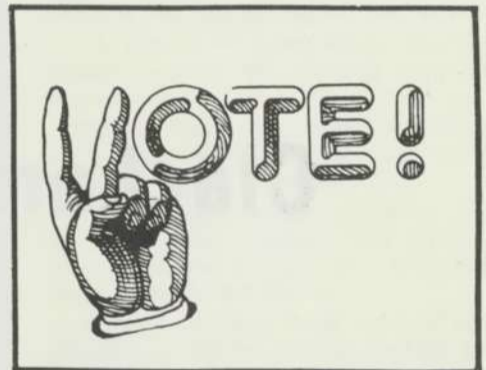

Weiss, who has been with CCC since 1969, said that Clackamas is now one of the leaders in community services and community education and is rated as one of the best in the nation.

Commenting on the broad scope of his program of community services, Weiss said that off campus locations for community education range from 70 to over 100 class-locations each term.

"In working with the public schools and carrying a community-based program," said Weiss, "better services are provided to the public as well as better usage of the facilities (public schools and CCC), more efficient use of tax dollars and funds and improved instruction and expanded programs."

Dr. Marvin Weiss, dean of community services and community education, received the "Man of the Year" award from the National Council on Community Services and Continuing Education.
