

Budget election . . .

"Students don't have to go to their own polls to vote even if they're registered," said Fryett, "and students who are not registered can do so there in a matter of minutes and vote at the same time."

The Office of Community Relations at CCC is doing its part to promote the budget election. Releases informing the public about the college and its goals and the facts of the budget have been sent to all newspapers and radio and television stations in the area.

Slide presentations are being shown to various groups throughout the area and speakers are informing the public about the college.

In addition to this, a 20 minute radio show will be aired this week on KYXI to discuss the budget, the college and what it means.

Mostly what is needed is student and staff support, according to Fryett.

"We had more than enough faculty staff and their spouses to pass it less that didn't even get out to vote," Fryett.

Most of the support for the last election came from the metropolitan areas of Clatskanie, Oregon City and Gladstone. Rural areas of Colton, Molalla, Redland and Estacada provided the most negative response.

Fryett does not feel particularly optimistic or pessimistic about next Tuesday's election.

"It's quiet and I haven't heard a great deal of negative views about it," he said. "I'm uncertain."
