

Student Opinions

Are you aware of the Associated Student Government elections? Are you going to vote?

Yes, I'm aware of the elections. I'm not sure if I'm voting yet. I have not been confronted or know who any of the candidates are. It depends if I find out about them before election time.

- Marilyn Gillette

Yes, I am aware of the elections. I'm not voting because I feel I have not been informed and educated about the people up for election.

- Linda Dempsey

Yes, I am aware of the election and I do plan on voting.

- Rachel Howlton

Yes, I am aware of the election and I will exercise my democratic rights.

Lytle equipped to handle presidency

The current race for Associated Student Government President for the 1989-90 school year is a race of specifics vs. generalizations.

This was clear at the Candidate Forum last Friday.

Garett Lytle and Stephen Rudometkin both have their strengths and weaknesses. However, Lytle seems more sincere in his quest for the ASG presidency.

Throughout the majority of the campaign, Lytle's response to inquiries as to what he would do as president has been more specific than Rudometkin's responses.

Rudometkin has said little more than that he would be searching for students' opinions and requests. We have already had one year of an executive officer whose policy was exactly that. He has not been clear on what he would do when he found out what those opinions are.

The only time Rudometkin has disclosed any specifics was during the Election Forum when questions regarding the biggest issue facing the president, the president's most important duty, and the first change he would make if elected.

The students can't elect a president who would go into the job unprepared. It appears that Rudometkin would be doing just that.

Lytle, on the other hand, has had prior experience in working in conjunction with ASG. He has stated several specific ideas on specific issues which he would pursue if elected. Lytle also has outstanding academic stability. With a cumulative 3.93 grade point average, it's the kind of stability that was lacking in some ASG officers this year.

This year ASG's entertainment section struggled. Lytle, a theatre major, promises to get quality entertainment from local bands and providing a variety of artists that should appeal to students and increase student involvement, something both candidates feel must be done.

Lytle is also interested in making sure students attain good jobs after they graduate from college. He also promises to be available to students who need to consult with him.

Rudometkin's views on things such as the smoking issue are simply not realistic. Stating that "non-smokers who walk through the smoking section shouldn't complain" is a personal view as a smoker, in contrast to the candidate who says he will act on opinions from students.

Clackamas' ASG needs someone who will deal with specific issues on the minds of students. The issues are obvious. The choice for ASG president is obvious. Garett Lytle.
