Keyser receives national honor Engineer Benton

by Christopher L. Curran Editor-In-Chief

Clackamas Community college President John S. Keyser received another honor in his career recently when he was named vice chair in the American Asso ciation of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC).

A vice chair in the AACJC is a chair-elect, spending a year training to chair one of five commit-tees in that association. A vice chair is also an ex-officio (non-voting) member of some commit-

"It's a great opportunity for me to grow," said Keyser. "The national agenda, in contrast with the local agenda is much more complicated. It's a new dimension

The AACJC is an organization which aims to represent the interests of community and junior colleges throughout the na-

"It is the most aggressive and largest post-secondary organiza-tion in the country," said Keyser.

The organization has grown from 22 members in 1920 to 1,087 members this year.

Among other things, the AACJC works with funding or-

According to the report, during this school year, grant money was directed to more than 130 colleges, which are members of the organization.

The AACJC also collects data from community, junior and technical colleges, such as enrollment (both part-time and full-time. Using these figures, they advise the United States Department of Education. and other national research agencies who are charged with analyzing higher education. The AACJC is working to make the transfer from a two-year college to a four-year college easier on students.

They are attempting to reduce barriers which impede stu dent transfers to a four-year school.

They are combining all the resources of the community, junior and technical colleges to improve the student development.

Clackamas lost a long-time employee and a good friend Sunday, May 14 when engineer Dale Benton died from complications of cancer.

Benton served in the Navy for 21 years as a chief petty officer before retiring in 1971 and coming to Clackamas in 1973. His Clackamas career started as a custodian, but made the jump to stationary engineer in 1975 and stayed there until his death.

"He was a loyal employee. He was loyal to the college; loyalty was worth a lot," said Paul Roe-

Roeder was Benton's supervisor, but was also his close friend. The two spent a lot of time to-gether outside of work, including holidays.

"I've had (Benton) at my house
"Banksgiving-all of for Christmas, Thanksgiving-all of the holidays. He was like part of the family, my kids all liked him. He appeared to be a tight person, but he had a good heart. He helped a lot of people on campus," said

Benton was divorced and the father of two. He spent most of his time at Clackamas, whether working or socializing. He was eligible to retire last year, but wasn't

"He was losing money working, but he loved this school. This was his social life. Dale was a strong supporter of women's basketbal It was like he adopted the women's team," said Roeder.

"Dale has always helped our with athletics all the time that I've been here, since 1980. He was always supportive of athletics and willing to help in any way he could said Phil Garver, long-time friend and head weepen and head and head women's basketba coach
