

A must see movie for people with parents

For those of you with parents Dad is a movie for you. Starring Jack Lemmon as dad, and Ted Danson as son, the movie is the story of the two.

Lemmon is married to Olympia Dukakis as mom, who has a heart attack that lands her in the hospital. Danson has to come down to take care of his father.

In the three years since he had last seen his father, his life had become routine. At least everyone has made it that way, waking him up, getting him breakfast, and doing basically everything for him.

Danson decides to break up the routine a little and low and behold his dad is alive. This surprises everyone.

Now the movie becomes "the trials and tribulations of an old man and his son." This doesn't make it a bad movie. In fact, it makes it an important movie.

In the next few years, the number one form of discrimination will not be race neither will it be sex, but rather it will be age.

Even now across the United States people are being let go from jobs, not because they can no longer do the job but rather because they cost too much. As people get older and stay at a job their raises begin to add up, so does the experience.

When we are young we can't get a job because we don't have any experience; when we are old we can't keep a job because we have too much.

The movie is important for that reason. Even though we all have relatives who are old, sometimes we don't like to visit them. This movie will allow us to see that old people are people too-like you had to hear this from me.

If this isn't a good enough reason to see the movie then maybe that it is a touching, heart-warming, intimate, tender, beautiful, remarkable, loving little story of a father, his son and the last days of his life. I only hope to die with as much dignity.

Landauer returns to teaching

After taking a couple of years off, Engineering Instructor Ed Landauer is back at the chalk board.

Landauer took a job during this time as a manager of Industrial Engineering at Westinghouse.

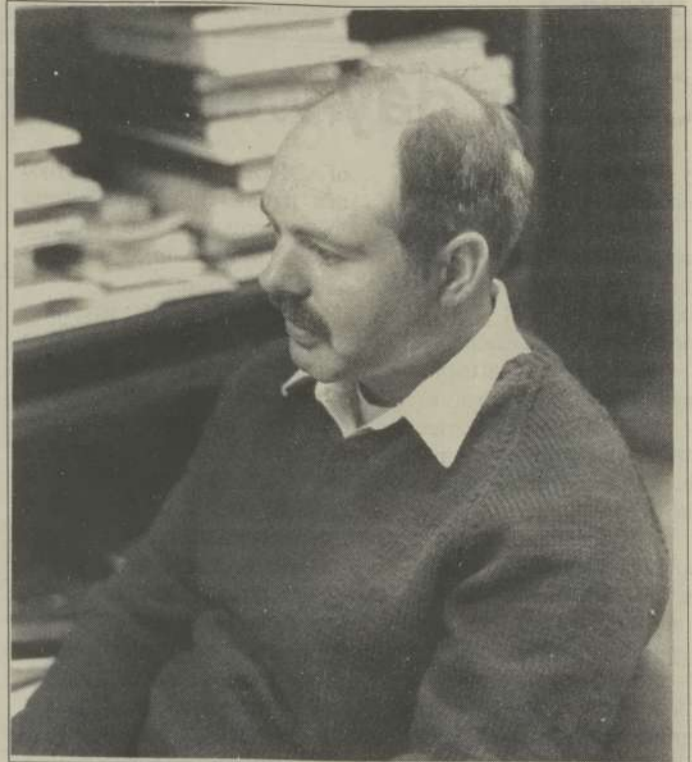

"I wanted to see what it was like to be an engineer in the industry. But I also did some teaching of night classes and taught some courses for the company," stated Landauer.

Even now that he is back in the classroom, Landauer still works in the industry as a consultant.

"I mostly set up and teach training courses for different companies," explained Landauer.

Landauer started his academic career in Portland, where he grew up. He earned a bachelor's and master's in math at Portland State University. He then moved on to teach at Montana State and also earned a master's in statistics. At the University of Central Florida he received the last of his master's degrees in engineering. He has also instructed in the Navy and at Columbia Basin College.

He made his way back to Oregon and has been teaching at Clackamas for a year. Although he enjoys teaching here, he did enjoy his travels.

"I wanted to see what it was like around the country. I missed Oregon; it has been six states since I was last here," explained.

While coming back to teaching, Landauer was able to bring some of the things he learned in the field back into the classroom.

"I like teaching better, but while I was working I was collecting information to bring back. I now have a lot of examples. It wasn't as different as I thought it would be. I just didn't get my summers off," commented Landauer.
