

Quacks cover concerns of crushes, cars, condoms

Editor's Note: Neither Dr. Love nor Prof. Feelgood are trained counselors, therefore, this column is for entertainment value only. Those who have real problems should seek the help of a professional counselor or call the Personal Crisis Hotline at 655-8724.

Dear Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good,
When I look into my instructor's tantalizing eyes, I just want to melt. I've lost my concentration and just can't seem to get rid of those butterflies in my stomach. What do I do?

Love Sick

Dear Love Sick,
Unfortunately we cannot condone relationships with instructors. A relationship between a staff member and a student should be strictly professional; however, that rarely works either. We can only suggest that you put your emotions on hold and try not to melt all over the desk, the janitors have enough work as it is. As for the butterflies in your stomach take some antacid tablets; they work wonders.

Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good

Dear Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good,
I'm really glad this column started up because frankly I need some pretty serious help. I'm absolutely mad about this guy on campus, but the problem is the way he dresses. I, personally, am enthralled by his outrageous boxers that he wears (especially the ones with the hot pink lips splashed all over them,) but all my friends think he's weird. My question is: Who's weirder? Him for wearing them, or me for liking him?

Hot Lips

Dear Hot Lips,
Judging a person by the undergarments he wears, despite how different they may be, is nothing short of ludicrous. Your friends are just jealous. Unfortunately for them, not everyone has the social grace that the two of you are blessed with. As for the question of who is weirder, relax. You two are fine, although he needs to switch his pattern to a more earthy tone for the winter season. Remember, wearing white after Labor Day is a fashion faux pas.

Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good

Ask the Quacks
Dubious advice from Dr. Love and Prof. Feelgood

Dear Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good,
Please tell me why it is that when you are traveling down the highway and you take the exit you want get off at people always lean the way they turn their cars. Do they have to scratch themselves or what? You can go a good enough speed without having to lean the way you are turning.

Bob the Stud

Bob the Stud,
Sounds like you have a lot of confidence just by the way you signed your letter. You have made an excellent observation. We investigated your claim and proceeded to research this matter. We traveled endless miles taking exit after exit with much frustration at our findings. You're right. People do "lean." At one point we witnessed an elderly lady who leaned so far that her car tipped over and was hit by a bus carrying a congregation of nuns who were also leaning while turning. This was not a pretty sight. As for your theory of people scratching themselves, that is a good possibility since most people find that their time behind the wheel is prime nose-picking time. The only logical explanation we can offer you is they find it to also be prime scratching time.

Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good

Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good,
When it comes to condoms, does one size really fit all?
Concerned about Condoms

Concerned about Condoms,
Studies show that (except in extreme cases) condoms are indeed "one size fits all." However, if an unusually small object is placed in a larger container, nature proves that it will not remain intact. If an incredibly large object is forced into an object too small, this may be stretching the effectiveness to a breaking point. If that is the case, be sure and use reinforcements or have backups ready.

Dr. Love and Prof. Feel Good

Questions for "Ask the Quacks" can be turned in at the Student Activities Office or in Trailer B north of Randall Hall. Questions should be written legibly and should clearly state that they are intended for the "Ask the Quacks" column.

Campus Views

Given the situation in Eastern Europe do you think Communism will survive?

Chuck Scott: The people in communist countries will continue to seek the economic and personal freedoms they see others enjoying. This pressure for change will cause the change of communism as it has been for the last thirty or forty years.

Vince Fitzgerald: I think that Socialism is a legitimate and viable government. Communism as a more restrictive form may not survive. At present, Eastern Europe should be supported in its efforts to solidify and workable economic and philosophical system.

Jack Johnson: Yes, because it's been around so long. Change cannot take place too fast. When economy is based on communism change will not be over night.

Thomas A. Jordan: No, the biggest part of communism in the world is Russia and everyone will follow their hand in destroying communism.

