Public Safety aids effort to make campus a safer place

by Angela Wilson
Editor-in-Chief

Campus safety has been a concern to faculty, staff and students at Clackamas, according to Public Safety Chief Jim Wiseman.

"Students, faculty and staff have responded well in helping to identify potentially dangerous situations," Wiseman said.

According to Wiseman, there have only been a couple of fights and any interpersonal disputes were settled. There have been no reported rapes and through an aggressive patrol pattern, the theft situation has been brought down to a minimum.

Wiseman attributes these accomplishments to the more aggressive campus parking lot patrols, the cadet program, the increased awareness and information distribution about the reconstructed Public Safety Department.

We know from experience . . . deviants will use the darkness to their advantage."

With winter upon us and the shorter days, there is an increasing concern about the lighting on campus.

"There have been a number of concerns about what people perceive as inadequate lighting," Wiseman said. "The Engineering Department is working with us to replace any burnt-out bulbs and re-wire lights that need to be.

"Lighting is a subjective thing," Wiseman said, "with the different angles, intensity, shrubbery, trees and various things blocking the lights.

"We know from experience, in a predatory environment, deviants will use the darkness to their advantage," Wiseman said.

Wiseman urges people using the campus during dark hours "to never walk alone, never use dark secluded pathways and to be vigilant to suspicious cars and people and report them to the information dispatch center" so Public Safety can follow up on them. The dispatch can be reached by dialing "0" on any campus telephone.

According to Wiseman, there is some concern over safety and the use of the new jogging trail.

"Our recommendation, if it is going to be used at night, is for people to use common sense and not use the path alone and always walk with a companion or companions," Wiseman said.

"The very essence of beauty of the trail is also the essence of the danger or potential for danger after dark," Wiseman said.

The Jim Streeter Computer Tech building is scheduled to be completed sometime in the Spring. At the last board meeting names for all of the new buildings were approved.

Board approves new building names

The College Board approved the recommended names for the new buildings at the Nov. 14 meeting.

The recommendations, which were made by College President John Keyser, were based on the idea that each of the buildings be named after a pioneer, either old or new.

The buildings will be named as follows: the Streeter Computer Tech Building, the Gregory Forum Building and the Eva Emery Dye Building.

James A. Streeter served as an instructor at Clackamas for 22 years. He was the Department Chair of Mathematics and Engineering before his death in

"Jim was one of our longest standing and most outstanding faculty members when he passed away last year," explained President Keyser to the board in the memorandum with the proposed building names.

"Although this building would be named after Jim, it would be dedicated in commemoration of all staff accomplishments," Keyser continued.

William Gregory was a member of the school board from 1970 until his death in Oct. 1988. He served as board chairman in 1972, 1981 and again in 1985.

"Given the Board's role to represent the community and the significant community use that this facility will receive, it seems most appropriate to name this building after Bill," wrote Keyser.

Dye was an Oregon City resident from 1880 to 1941. She was responsible for a literacy circle being formed in Oregon City and she also taught kindergarten in her home. According to Keyser, Dye was best known as founder of the Gladstone Chautauqua. She also supported government reform and voting rights for women.

"Certainly, Eva Emery Dye was a local pioneer of some significance. Our New Pioneers, Bill Gregory and Jim Streeter, are individuals of whom we can be proud and hope to emulate," Keyser stated.

Student government plans week that lacks student involvement

by Angela Wilson

Associated Student Government (ASG) is sponsoring Alcohol Awareness Week through Friday.

The events planned for the remainder of the week are a film, titled "Chalk Talk", which will be shown in the Fireside Lounge from 1 to 2:30 p.m. today. On Friday there will be an awards ceremony in the Community Center Mall from 1 to 1:30 p.m.

According to Becca Schroeder, ASG administrative assistant and coordinator of the event, the poster theme contest and the alcohol free party have been canceled.

The poster contest was canceled because there were no entries and the alcohol free party was canceled due to a scheduling conflict with the Jazz Ensemble concert this Friday night, according to Schroeder.

An assembly featuring two speakers was to have taken place yesterday, but due to lack of promotion and student participation it was canceled. The assembly is tentatively scheduled to take place sometime in January.

Friends of library to host authors

The Friends of the Library will be presenting an evening with noted authors tomorrow, Nov. 29 at 7 p.m., in Pauling Center 101. Authors scheduled to attend are Clyde Rice, David Shetzline, Bruce Berger, Craig Lesley and Conrad Haynes. For further information contact the Friends of the Library or Allen Widerburg.

Game room discussions underway

by Nolan Kidwell

A committee was formed yesterday to make recommendations for a new location for the recreation center.

Possible locations and concerns were discussed at the committee's first meeting. The locations which are currently being considered are Randall 101; an area in McLoughlin Hall after it is renovated; Barlow 112, 113, and 114; and the small dining room which is located in the back of the community center cafeteria.

If the game room is relocated in the McLoughlin renovation, it will be temporarily housed in the former public safety trailer until the new space is ready for it.

"I encourage the committee to think about creative options and opportunities that would accommodate this recreational interest on our campus," said College President John Keyser in a memo.

Some of the chief concerns mentioned in the meeting were the cost of the move, security, the effects of educational programs, the maintenance of the facility, the level of displacement of the programs which were located in space previously, and the accessibility for students and handicapped who will be using the facility.

The committee, which is made up of 12 staff members and four students, is being headed by Thomas Jones, a faculty member from business administration.

The committee will meet again this Friday at 7 a.m. for further discussion. The committee's decision will only be a recommendation; the final choice will be left up to the President's Council.

This car was unfortunately parked under a tree losing its leaves. With the cold winter season under way, the grounds keepers have relieved the campus of dead fallen leaves.
