

Two faculty members who recently died are fondly remembered by their co-workers.

See page 2

Co-Editor-in-Chief Jeff Kemp welcomes students and faculty to a new school year.

See page 2

Carlota Holley and six second-year Spanish students traveled to Costa Rica for 27 days this summer.

See page 3

Cougars cross-country season has begun and they're running all over the competition.

See page 3

Wednesday, October 13, 1993

The Clackamas Print

Vol. XXVII No. 1

Clackamas Community College

Oregon City, Oregon

ASG starts year with new goals, theme

by Jeff Kemp
Co-Editor-in-Chief

The Associated Student Government of Clackamas Community College, fresh with a new slogan, has outlined its goals for the 1993-94 school year.

"Associated Student Government is students helping fellow students become successful in their education, home life and career" is this year's theme.

One of the major concerns this year, according to ASG, is student safety. One goal is to increase the lighting of the four main passageways that lead to the various parking lots around campus by the end of Spring Term. There are also plans to trim the assorted shrubbery for increased visibility. Weekly personal safety classes are also beginning this fall.

Student Government is also acknowledging the need for cooperative childcare, a need that will be met in some form by the beginning of the Winter Term.

Legislatively, ASG plans to inform the student body weekly regarding local, state and national issues. The tight budget situation has caused the House of Representatives to reduce Pell Grant aid for college students. ASG hopes to gather 5,000 letters from Clackamas students concerning the Pell Grant by June, 1994. Questions regarding legislative matters the college may be involved in can be directed to Angela Dierdorf, ASG's legislative director.

A special student service 24-hour, multi-use hotline is also in the making. All calls will be forwarded to student volunteers who sign up for specific hours to assist their fellow students.

Some of the services the hotline could provide include: a list of college resources, study group contacts, study tips, stress-reduction techniques and referral numbers for abuse, suicide and drug and alcohol abuse.

Five separate seminar/lectures are also scheduled each term. Topics of the seminar include: success as a student, home life, and/or career goals and opportunities. In coordination with the seminars, support and study groups are also available to all students.

A blueprint of a volunteer program has been designed to take effect by the beginning of Winter Term. The program will place volunteers in a position of service that enhances their educational experience to best benefit the community. The program is devised to log 500 student volunteer hours by the end of Fall Term, with an increase each following term. In addition, ASG hopes to have students involved in all college committees by the end of Fall Term.

Questions regarding any of the above goals and ideas of the Associated Student Government can be left in the suggestion box in front of the ASG office located in the CC Mall. For more information, call 657-6958, ext. 2247.

Duval begins journey

by Jeff Kemp
Co-Editor-in-Chief

Deanne Duval wasn't planning on embarking on a social, moral and ethical journey when she arrived at Clackamas two years ago.

As fate would have it, Duval has become not only a well-educated student but the voice of the entire student body. The 27-year-old was elected the college's Associated Student Government's president near the end of Spring Term.

A 4H member and leader for 20 years, Duval also owns her own business and is a regional representative for American Student Association for Community Colleges (ASACC).

Duval is rather humble when asked of her role as ASG president.

"All of ASG's goals should be accomplished if I never show up again. I want everyone to be educated and informed and able to function with or without me," Duval explained.

All of Duval's hard work doesn't go unnoticed by her fellow ASG co-workers.

"She helps to guide us. She's like our mom," ASG Senator Michelle Shipman said.

Photo by Anjanette Booth

The new parking lot, when it is discovered by drivers, will help put an end to congestion in other lots on campus.

New parking lot needs attention

by Heidi Branstator
Co-Editor-in-Chief

"This campus is jammed," said Jim Wiseman, Public Safety Supervisor, regarding the parking situation at Clackamas this year.

There is a new parking lot next to the Family Resource Center that was never more than 40 percent full last week, Wiseman said.

The new lot is located through the FRC entrance and behind the building. It is ideal parking for students who have classes in McLoughlin, Streeter, and/or the Dye Learning Center.

Wiseman said he is hoping people will start using a "friendship system" and car pool to get to school. At $900 to $1,000 a space, "we can't afford to keep (putting in new parking lots)," he said.

The lot is well-lit and has no trees to create shadows during night parking.

Student assaulted; suspect apprehended

by Heidi Branstator
Co-Editor-in-Chief

A Clackamas student was assaulted near the west wall of the Community Center as she waited for her bus on the evening of July 19.

Kato Mizuho came out of the math lab in Streeter Hall around 10 p.m. to wait for her 10:30 p.m. bus. According to Jim Wiseman, Public Safety supervisor, Robert Wayne North Jr., a young man in his mid-20s, tried to engage in conversation with Mizuho. She janitor then came from the other direction. North ran across campus, through the courtyard.

"Public Safety gave chase in the general area," Wiseman said. North was picked up near Shari's restaurant as a suspect at approximately 11:30 p.m. Mizuho identified North and Public Safety officer Michael Asboe made the arrest.

North, who is not a Clackamas student, "smelled of alcohol" Wiseman said. He was also out on parole for a "similar-walked away from him and sat down near the entrance to the CC Mall.

North was hiding in the doorway of the counseling office and when Mizuho walked by, he grabbed her and threw her down.

When she heard her bus coming, Mizuho gathered her books and walked toward the bus. North was hiding in the doorway of the counseling office and when Mizuho walked by, he grabbed her and threw her down.

The commotion caught the attention of a bus passenger who began yelling at North. A type crime," he said.

Mizuho continued to take classes and Public Safety "made sure we were in the area when she caught her bus," Wiseman said.

Public Safety is attempting to increase the number of cadets and officers on duty.

"Our focus for having (officers and cadets) here is during student hours," Wiseman said. However, changes take time, he concluded.