E-Mail arrives, at least for staff

by Michelle Shipman
The Print Staff

Clackamas Community College is now in the process of installing E-Mail, a system in which information on any networked PC can be sent to any other networked PC.

Many universities and colleges have this system. The system at Clackamas is currently for administrative and instructional use, and it is inter-campus only.

"We received a $25,000 grant from a science foundation to put (the national and international) E-MAIL on all computers," said microcomputer technician Scott Branscom. He hopes to get E-MAIL on the computers in the lab by next spring, but stresses that the date is not set in stone.

Many students will enjoy the convenience that E-MAIL provides. They can send homework and other assignments to teachers, as well as send and receive information all around the world.

Gary Dirrim, shown here working on his computer, will soon be able to utilize the arriving E-Mail technology.

Speech team excels at Nationals

by Michele Myers
The Print Editorial Staff

Clackamas Community College's Forensics team beat the odds and tough competition in Speech Nationals in Orlando, FL., April 4 through 8, coming away with three bronzes, one gold and seventh place overall.

The speech team, consisting of Coach Frank Harlow, Avril Johnson, James Spiering, Ryan Hull, Nicole Turley and Mike Hiranonboon, spent eight days in Orlando. The speech competition lasted five long days at the Hilton, where the team stayed. There was a total of about 700 competitors from 72 schools.

Three people on the team broke into semi-finals: Johnson, who won a bronze with her persuasive speech on the underground economy and a gold with her informative speech about maggots therapy; Spiering, who won a bronze with his dramatic interpretation of "Poster of the Cosmos," and Turley, who won a bronze with her informative speech on lotteries. Only the top 20 percent of the semi-finalists went on to finals, where only one won either a silver or a gold.

"It was the toughest tournament most of us have ever attended. However, our team kept its grace through victory and defeat," Turley explained.

Space still available for Women's Weekend

Spaces are still open and some half-scholarships are available for this year's Sixth Annual Women's Weekend, coming up April 29-May 1.

"Meeting the Challenge" is the theme this year for the event which will again be held at YMCA Camp Collins, just east of Gresham on the Sandy River. As in previous Women's Weekends, the event will include workshops, river rafting, music, art and relaxation. Cost for all sessions, food and lodging is $125.

Workshop presenters include several staff members at the college: Assistant Dean Marcia Keith, whose topic is "Breast Cancer: After You Cry, Then What?"; Bernie Nolan, counselor: "Women's Rituals:

Celebrate Yourself"; Kate Gray, English instructor: "Women Who Run with Words"; Gisele Tierney, communications instructor: "Look Who's Talking! Women!"; and Carolyn Alexander, psychology instructor: "Women's Sexuality: Facts and Fantasies."

Other presenters are Marilynne Keyser, formerly of Gov. Barbara Roberts' office and wife of College President John Keyser, whose topic is "Stopping Your Life and Starting it Over Again"; Jan Bernard, R.N., on "Care of the Heart: Opening to Loss and Grief"; and Lisa Wentworth, program director at YMCA Camp Collins, who will work with participants on the ropes challenge course.

Music will be provided once again by Motherlode, four women from the Northwest who have recorded three albums and played in October at the Portland Center for the Performing Arts. An art session featuring works in Fimo clay and in weaving will also be part of the weekend, led by Cheryl Kempner, an instructor at Lane Community College.

Coordinators for this year's Women's Weekend are Bernie Nolan and Ellen Wolfson, counselors; Rene Rathburn, assistant dean of instruction; and Linda Vogt, journalism instructors.

To register, sign up through the Registrar's Office for WKS 1-02. Persons interested in a scholarship application may get one by calling Ellen Wolfson at 657-6958, ext. 2550.
