Health concerns force Dye evacuation

Amy Ku'uipo Hanson
Managing Editor

The west office area of the Dye Learning Center has been evacuated in reaction to health concerns related to mold caused by water leaks.

"Everyone may react differently," said Jim Painter, associate dean of human resources in regard to symptoms people may experience. "It's the same kinds of problems that you get from pollution in the air. It's just that the concentrations are higher in the building."

Weekly update meetings for Dye residents are being held to discuss concerns and progress. Painter said that he is not aware of any students or staff who have had any long term problems. "No staff member has missed more than three days of work," he said.

According to Painter, all employees that have had allergic reactions or concerns and wanted to be moved have been relocated.

Anyone who suffers from allergies, respiratory ailments or depressed immune systems is more likely to experience adverse reactions to the environment.

Students with concerns or questions should contact Frieda Wheeler, administrative secretary to director to LRC, at ext. 2462.

To minimize health risks the following programs have been relocated.

The Adult High School Diploma, General Educational Development (GED) programs have been moved to the Community Center. ESL classes have been moved to various locations in Randall and Barlow Halls.

The Training in Adaptive Computer Technology (TACT) Center and lab are currently occupying the Fireside Lounge. The Learning Center Lab for GED and High School classes are located in CC127 and Media Checkout can be found in CC126.

Angela Sandercock, department secretary for the Dye Learning Center, has also been relocated to the Community Center. Situated in front of the Fireside Lounge, she is able to give students directions and answer questions.

The main entrance to the Dye Center has been closed off to through traffic and is open only for restroom use. Doors on the South side of the building are being used to access the library. Two doors on the East side are open for instructors to get to their offices.

Directional signs have been posted outside Dye Center and doors closed and sealed with tape.

Professionals are being brought in to seal off the West side of the building and sanitize it using Hepavac, which according to Carol Patterson, associate dean of

Plant Services, is "an extreme form of vacuuming for microbes."

Problems with mold in the Dye Learning Center have been attributed to the use of a synthetic stucco siding called Exterior Insulation and Finish Systems (EIFS).

Since the introduction of EIFS in 1969 there have been a number of similar cases, most notably in North Carolina. There the synthetic stucco was used on a number of upper-income homes.

According to an article from a May 1996 issue of Architecture magazine, "North Carolina's New Hanover County Inspections Department has observed significant problems with EIFS-clad houses."

The department examined 72 houses at random adorned with EIFS, all under three years old. Seventy of these "suffered from water infiltration."

The synthetic stucco siding allows water and moisture to seep into exterior walls through failed caulking, but does not let it escape. This trapped moisture is the cause of the mold growth in the Dye Center.

"If water gets in, there is no planned way for it to get out," said Director of Plant Services Kirk Pearson.

Laney Fouse will take on the role of next year's Editor-in-Chief.

Chad Patteson
Editor-in Chief

Current copy editor Laney Fouse has been chosen as next year's Editor-in-Chief for The Clackamas Print.

She has shown outstanding qualifications in all aspects of newspaper publication, according to Linda Vogt, Print advisor.

"Her organizing skills have added efficiency and accuracy to the production of the newspaper," Vogt said. "Because of the added feedback she provided, there has been a definite improvement in submitted stories, making it a win-win situation for everyone."

Fouse's other activities include serving as president of the Native American Students' Club, serving as secretary of Phi Theta Kappa and working as the superintendent of the Atrium Gallery for the Clackamas County Fair.

Her experience in journalism started in the late 1960s when she had the opportunity to be a radio announcer. There, she learned about producing commercials, writing news copy and doing her own morning show. She mentioned, "you truly had to be thinking on your feet when in front of an open mike."

Her future plans include getting a Journalism degree and possibly starting her own newspaper someday.

"I don't know what life has in store for me, but the door of opportunity is always open and I want to be prepared."

According to incumbent ASG President Mike Caudle, Fouse's great communication skills combined with her strong will and leadership qualities make her the perfect candidate for Editor-in-Chief.

Fouse resides in Canby with her husband Marlin and daughters, Kacey and Kelly.

Chamber choir invited to perform in Estonia

The CCC Chamber Choir will be on tour this summer in Tallinn, Estonia which is located on the Baltic Sea.

Music Instructor Lonnie Cline, along with 36 choir members will be participating in ESTO96, a world friendship song and dance festival.

"We will be touring the country August 3 - 19 and singing with a choir of over 6,000 for the closing ceremonies of the festival," said Cline.

The choir was invited to participate in the special event based on their prior performances of Estonian music in the Portland area.

This included an appearance at the West Coast Estonian Song and Dance Festival held last summer at the Arlene Schnitzer Concert Hall.

The choir has been invited to repeat their festival performance next year in Vancouver, B.C.

Each student has raised about $1500 for this tour and they are still working on bringing in more funds.

Towards this effort, the chamber singers will be in concert in the Gregory Forum at 7:30 p.m. on June 2. A silent auction has also been scheduled for that time.

"At that concert we will be performing selections from Carmina Burana by Carl Orff with the CCC Instrumental Ensemble conducted by Gary Nelson," said Cline.

Pianist Rhonda Yingling will be playing accompaniment. The choir will also perform a variety of choral literature from the Renaissance era.

The choir is the only non-Estonian choir invited to the festival which expects a crowd of 350,000 people.

"It is probably the highest honor that a Clackamas Community College choir has received," Cline said.

According to the music instructor, the concert opportunities and the cultural exchange in Estonia is immeasurable because 85 percent of the Estonian population sings in a choir.

The chamber choir and Cline wish to thank the CCC faculty, staff and students for their continued support.

They are especially grateful to the generous support from the Drama department, Student Activities, the College Foundation and Helle Kalle Merilo and the local Estonian Society.
