ASG: Focused on student needs

ROBERT SCHOENBERG
Staff Writer

Do you feel lucky today? Or do you believe in guardian angels?

Students at Clackamas should feel that someone is watching over them. Someone is caring about how this education they are receiving is all that it is supposed to be. That when they worry about the cost of this education, there is someone who is doing something about it.

The Associated Student Government is made up of these guardian angels, people with drive and determination to see that we get what we came here for. They are looking over our shoulder, unseen.

For next year's ASG president, we could have been stuck with some student that will work hard at scrounging free food, be diligent about finding a place to talk with friends and relentlessly acquiring a quiet corner in which to sleep off the afternoon.

Instead we have been lucky enough in the last couple of elections to have representatives willing to go face to face with tight-fisted politicians who want to cut funds for education, people who want to find more ways to cut the cost of getting an education by finding grants to pay for education and child care. These are not easy tasks. It means lots of travel and weekends away from home. It means commitment and determination, to organize despite resistance. I found that out when I went looking over at the ASG to do profiles on the students running in the Spring elections, looking to see what they do over there in their offices at the Community Center.

These people deserve our support. They have been looking out for us even when that support is not there. It is fortunate that the people in ASG pretty much know what is expected of them, to watch out for our interest. I feel luck may have had something to do with this, but let's be pragmatic and unsuperstitious about this; it was probably the hard work that the students and the advisor has done that made the difference.

Presidential candidate well qualified

Elections are looming and that means it's time for another knock-down, fight-till-the-death fight. Right? Nope. This year it's easy.

If you're a student at Clackamas Community College and you are thinking of voting then I encourage you to strongly consider casting your vote for David LeDoux.

I have known LeDoux for quite some time now and he has always impressed me as someone who is consistently organized, thoughtful and truly cares about what is going on here at Clackamas.

As campus issues officer for the Associated Student Government, LeDoux knows exactly what is going on in most — if not all — sectors of the college.

LeDoux has been involved with everything from on-campus intramural sports to national issues that affect the funding for Clackamas.

In addition, LeDoux has been able to successfully take Clackamas' cause all the way to the top — to Washington D.C. He is able get some of the most important people in the United States to listen — and act — on issues that Clackamas cares about.

LeDoux, if elected, will follow a long line of tremendously effective student leadership here on campus.

A year before I was on campus Amy Lundy was acting as president. Then came Mike Caudle and now Jacob Boenisch. All three have risen through the ranks of ASG and have proven to be great student body presidents. I believe that if LeDoux is elected he will follow in the tradition.

Letter to the editor

In my opinion, David LeDoux is the only viable candidate for student body president.

David has a firm commitment to developing the leadership possibilities for the students of Clackamas Community College. David has the uncanny ability to create situations where students are able to take an active part in their educational development and academic careers. David LeDoux is truly impassioned about students and this college.

Since I have known David I have seen him grow from that first-term, timid college student into a nationally respected figure for student advocacy. David has been able to represent students across the country all the way up to the steps of Washington D.C. When David speaks out on behalf of students, people listen.

Not only has David been a key component in furthering the student cause on the national level, but here at home on our campus as well. David has fought to ensure that student representation is present at all levels of the college's decision-making processes. The David shows that it is a key piece in making the Clackamas Community College experience the best that it can be for all of us.

When talking with David as a close friend of his it amazed me that he wanted to stay at Clackamas for a third year. He has had offers to come to OSU and work on a nationally recognized student government, he has been accepted to George Fox university, and has had offers to intern in Washington DC, but has passed all of this up to remain here at Clackamas to give back to the college, and students that have provided him all of these other great opportunities in life.

David is not out for a position and title to add to his resume, but rather to give all he has to offer to the students of Clackamas Community College.

David is willing to work for you, for me, and for a better quality of student life on campus. That is why David LeDoux has my vote for student body president, and I hope we can count on you to make the right decision and vote LeDoux on May 4th and 5th.

Thank you,
Joshua D. Bruegman
