Haggen store is part of a chain that has been around since 1933. It is one of many stores moving in across from the college on Hwy 213. A Starbucks coffee will be a part of Haggen soon. (A Carl's Jr. is also currently being built in the same shopping Center.) Haggen sells many things besides groceries, including flowers, books, and deli goods. To receive discounts that Haggen advertises, you must have a Haggen membership card, which is free to all customers. Haggen is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Take your daughters to work

DIANA SCRIVNER
Associate News Editor

Remember back to the days of junior high school, and your adolescent years. Most people recall good times as well as bad; times of insecurity, awkwardness and trying to fit in with friends are what a lot of adolescent years are about.

The Ms. Foundation of America created Take Our Daughters to Work Day eight years ago to "help girls stay strong and remain confident" through the teen years, according to their web site, at www.takeourdaughters.towork.org. It was also designed to show young women different job opportunities available to them.

This year's theme is "Free to

Be You and Me," to encourage girls to think about diversity and gender equity, and members of Clackamas' American Association of Women in Community Colleges (AAWCC) are getting involved. They are hosting a luncheon for girls and their parents or escorts at noon, Thursday April 27, in the Gregory Forum.

The lunch will have interactive entertainment for the daughters. The cost is $10 for adults and every daughter age nine to 15 who accompanies them is admitted free of charge.

To participate, register by phone at 656-6626 for WKS-001-005 (teler# 000377); for more information, call Carol Evans, Connections Coordinator, ext. 2444.
