

Cougar chef shares European cooking skills

DAISY BAIN

Cougar Cafe General Manager Anne E. Grassi will be teaching three special cooking classes this spring featuring her own cooking traditions and expertise learned while growing up in Europe.

Classes that are sponsored by the American Association of Women in Community Colleges (AAWCC) Connections will be held April 20, May 11 and June 1.

The first class, titled Northern Countryside Italian Dinner, has openings for 3 more students. Register for WKS-001-05; telephone registration is 040420. The second class, Mediterranean Dinner Salads, is full. The third class, Pasta Possibilities, has openings for 2 more people. Register for WKS-001-07; telephone registration is 040421. Classes cost $35 and include hands-on preparation and a full meal.

"I've been overwhelmed by interest," said Grassi. Although the first class is the same evening as the retirement party for John Keyser, "I am pretty confident it will all work out fine," she said.

"I am looking forward to people having a good time," says Grassi.

Raised in Italy, Grassi has learned that the Italians always took time to prepare food.

"What's normal to them, isn't normal here," she said.

According to Grassi, she will be bringing the old style, traditional food up to date. She wants to teach how to make European food as authentic and healthy as possible with what is available here.

"I have got a lot of different ideas for classes," said Grassi. If all goes well, she would like to possibly schedule more cooking classes in the future.

Keyser leaves generous endowment to college

For the last five months of his presidency, Dr. John Keyser is volunteering most of his time while receiving only a small stipend; he is donating the $75,000 he would have earned to the College Foundation to form the John Keyser Partnership Endowment.

"I wanted to make a major gift to the college endowment so in lieu of paying me, the Board of Education has made a contribution," said Keyser.

Endowments are usually established in one's name to support certain programs, departments or scholarships. Keyser's Partnership Endowment is unique in that it goes to match funds given by community donors. For example, if a person gives $5,000 towards the arts department, that amount is matched making their total scholarship $10,000.

"It is always easier to ask people to contribute dollars if they know that their dollars are going to double in value," said Keyser.

"The dollars will be spent on scholarships, equipment and capital projects like the Family Resource Center.

"To me the college stands for partnerships, the most fundamental partnership being that between the teacher and learner," said Keyser. "We need resources of all kinds to make that partnership happen."

"John has been extremely generous," said David Dickson, foundation executive director. "Not only with his time but also with his money. His philosophy is, if he is going to ask people in the community to give to the college, then he has to lead by example.

"To me, John's whole style of leadership has been about helping people achieve their dream and putting others in front of himself," said Dickson. "Which I think is a tribute to him."
