

Carolines rock the house

DAISY BAIN
A&E Editor

The Carolines, a five-deep band based in Portland, will perform live in the McLoughlin Theatre on Friday evening.

The backbone of inspiration for the five young (two band members are still finishing high school) artists include the Beach Boys, Stevie Wonder and The Beatles. The Carolines merge their own arrangements with these vintage sounds of rock bands from the mid-60s.

The band has been together for over five years and in Nov. 2001 released their CD "Don't Believe What You Hear."

In an interview with The Oregonian on Nov. 2, 2001, Purscelley described their band like this: "We're a rock band that keeps a leash on what we do. With pop music, you're writing to serve the song, but in rock you're working toward an audience response. We're not waiting for the Bic lighters to come out when we finish a show."

The CD consists of seven original songs, running 25 minutes long. They cover topics that appeal to most the target audience: the young ladies. Their ages can be heard in their voices, but the music is way beyond their years.

"Our goal is really to take these older ideas and put the stamp of our own personalities onto them. We don't claim to be revolutionaries—it's definitely pop music," said Purscelley. The concert, sponsored by the Associated Student Government, will open at 6:30 p.m., March 15. Tickets are $5 at the door.

If you miss the concert Friday night or want to see them again, you can catch them Thursday, March 21, 9 p.m., at Meow Meow in Portland. It's a show for all ages.
