Several interesting classes are easy to skip over in the mad rush of trying to put together a workable school schedule; here are a few ideas of upcoming fall classes that may spark some interest.

A new twist on teaching science is put to the test with ASC-200. Natural Science Inquiry is a four-credit class offered fall term either on Saturday from 8 to 11:50 a.m. or Tuesday and Thursday from noon to 2:50 p.m.

According to students who have taken the class, it is a fun, entertaining and dynamic class that is one in the series of three.

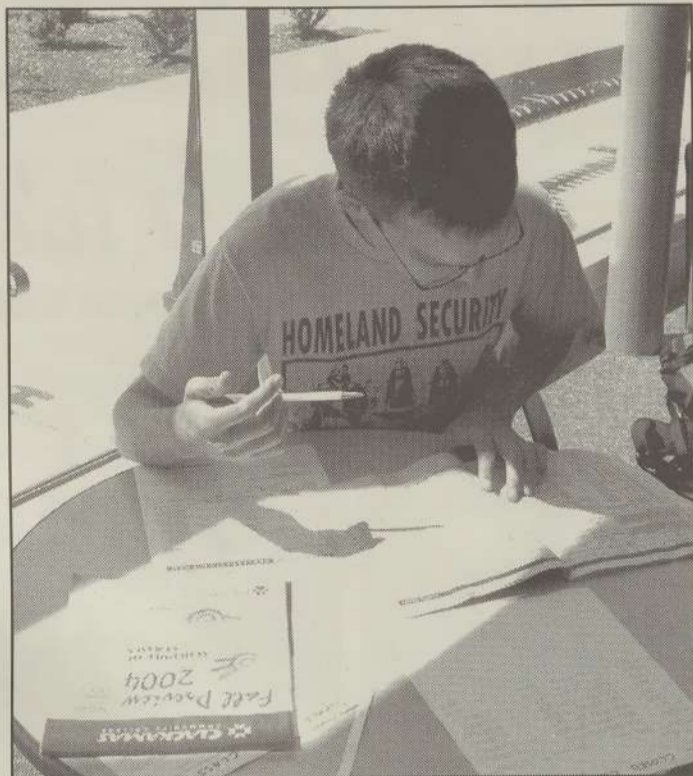

Instructor Bob Misley aims to teach the class in a way that no matter who takes it, they will come out with a new understanding of science.

It is a hands-on class that requires the student to keep a running journal of the events that take place throughout the term. Misley teaches a basic understanding of areas of sciences, connecting it all to the Lewis and Clark expedition.

At the end of the sequence, the class takes a field trip to the coast to explore Fort Clatsop. The completed sequence meets the AAOT science requirement.

The subject matter covers contemporary issues as well as the ethnographic, archaeological and ethno-historical evidence, which is used in exploring in the diversity of Native American cultures from the pre-historic times until the present.

This class is offered Monday, Wednesday and Friday of fall term from 11 a.m. to 12:35 p.m. Any three anthropology classes meet the social science sequence requirements for the AAOT.

Social Science Inquiry (SSC-223) is a four-credit class that will be offered fall term on selected Saturdays and Sundays. This class focuses on examining major topics and issues from pre-history through the Middle Ages. It includes a variety of perspectives from various areas ranging from philosophy, anthropology, history, science and religion.

Finally, although classes with an I'RP prefix may not transfer to all four-year institutions, I'RP-130 is still a fun class to check out. Introduction to Wildland Firefighting is a class designed to introduce students to the behavior of wildlife fires as well as the skills needed to fight them.

This three-credit class is offered on Wednesdays from 1 to 3:50 p.m. The training received from this class meets the standards set forth by the National Wildfire Coordinating Group for the course numbers S-130 and S-190.

These classes are nontraditional alternatives to the required classes or can be taken as electives.
