Incidents such as this, the loss of a printer and overhead projector from Roger Rook, and a burglary from the Streeter Annex have caused administrators to consider security options other than simply leaving doors locked.

"We are taking security as an issue in all of our buildings," said Ashbaugh "This is just another example of why we need it."

The relatively unrestricted access to computer equipment allowed the theft of two LCD monitors from the then-recently completed Streeter Annex last spring. As a result, eight new security cameras were recently installed in the computer science resource center located in the annex.

The 7,000-square-foot annex to Streeter Hall provides classroom space for computer science classes along with a resource room and work areas for students.

While the computer lab located in Streeter Hall is open to the student body, computers in the Streeter Annex are essentially for the use of computer science students.

The computers themselves have no permanent hard drives installed; computer science students are assigned individual interchangeable hard drives through which to complete assignments.

Rather than college staff monitoring the use of computers like in the Streeter Hall computer lab, computers in the annex are located in an open, commons-type area located near both entrance and exit.

The Associated Student Government currently offers two ways of helping students with their textbook buying troubles. Through ASG, students can partake in the Book Exchange or apply for book grants.

"People can mark their own prices," said Nick Verducci, the ASG officer of campus activities, of the Book Exchange. "So they can set it higher than what they could get back at the bookstore, but at a reasonable price, which would be cheaper than buying it [used] at the bookstore."

In recent years, ASG has dropped the price from $2 per book to $2 per form. A student can put up for sale eight books perform.

"[The grants] are available to any college student that is attending full-time," said Verducci, "[It's] basically for students with low income, that have kids [or] just need extra money [for books]."

While the Book Exchange is available to anyone on campus who wishes to make some money off of old textbooks or to buy them for "reasonable" prices, the book grants involve an application process.

"[To apply for the book grants,] you ... need an education plan, and if you're receiving financial aid, [we] need a copy of the grants or the loans you're getting, class schedule, transcripts ... and a letter saying why you need the grant," said Verducci.

The grant comes in the form of credit at the CCC Bookstore, and is only available for spending there.

The cap for the amount of money you can get for books is "most likely" about $150, said Verducci. The availability of the grants is uncertain, being that more money might be allotted to the grant fund at a later date.

Alternately, any money a student makes from the Book Exchange is theirs to keep, granting that he or she remembers to pick up the money from the ASG office.

The Exchange will take place in the new ASG offices, located where the Sky Room used to be cafeteria. It is ac two weeks of each as finals week.

It is never too late to pick up a card. Each year, a few children are left unpicked. Fortunately, the ASG supplies these children with gifts, but donations are always appreciated to keep these costs down.

After the gifts are received at the ASG office, they are wrapped and the families are called to pick up the packages. All gifts must be picked up by the Dec. 10, and those left at the office are donated to another charity.

For information about donating to the Giving Tree, stop by the ASG office or call ext. 5345.
