

Ladies' edition

The World Series was a sweep for the Boston Red Sox. They won their first four games, winning the series on Colorado territory.

But although we all thoroughly enjoyed watching the actual plays of the games, the ladies likely enjoyed watching the players more. For years, the fact that football players wear those tight pants has drawn women from all walks of life to watch the all-American sport.

Here are my top three "hot" players from each team.

RED SOX	Jacoby Ellsbury #46 Center Fielder World Series: First rookie in 61 years with four hits in a Series game, according to Sportsline.com. Interesting fact: Ellsbury was born and raised in Madras, Ore., and attended Oregon State University	Dustin Pedroia #15 Second Baseman World Series: Struggled in April but came back to make a difference in Games 1 and 2. Interesting fact: Considered by many to be a front-runner for the 2007 Rookie of the Year over teammate Ellsbury.	Jon Lester #31 Pitcher World Series: Pitched most of Game 4 in the World Series. Interesting Fact: Lester was diagnosed with cancer in spring 2006 and has had a full recovery to play in the World Series.
	Ian Stewart #24 Third Baseman World Series: Although normally playing third base, he has been training lately as a second baseman. Interesting Fact: Stewart bats left but throws right-handed.	Willy Taveras #3 Center Fielder World Series: Bench for Game 3 of the World Series. He was replaced with teammate Cory Sullivan. Interesting Fact: Voted National League Rookie of the Year 2006 by MLB players.	Taylor Buchholz #35 Pitcher World Series: Buchholz was not on the roster for the World Series and did not see playing time. He was on the roster for the playoffs but was not used. Interesting Fact: Traded with Taveras from Astros. This was his first season playing with the Rockies.
