Student reprimands administration for interference in the classroom

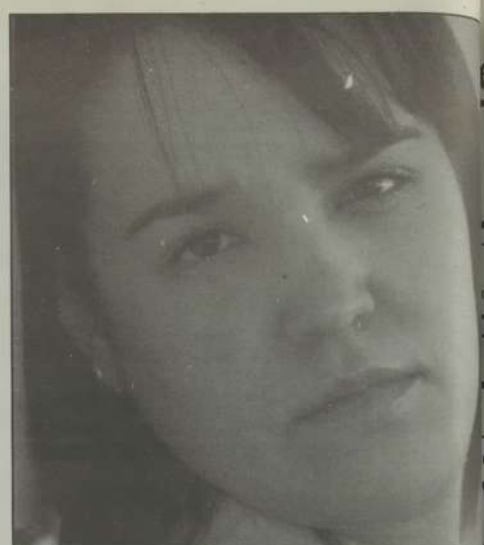

To the Editor:

Last week our Spanish conversation class was invaded by an envoy from administration who requested that our class use 45 minutes or possibly the entire class to fill out a survey regarding our engagement in the class.

After a 10-minute discussion of fully engaged students, we declined to donate our class time to this invasion of our classroom and attempted theft of services we had paid for.

I certainly hope that the author of this idea is reprimanded and ordered to desist from further ill-considered attempts to high-jack classroom time from students without regard for how it interferes with our obvious engagement in a conversation class.
