

Left: Osric, played by Tony Baer, finds out the hard way not to mess with an off-handed commedian about the way King Fortinbras, played by James Sharinghouse, runs his castle. Fortinbras is threatening Osric with a flogging to ensure he learns his lesson.

Below: Ophelia, played by Annie Scharich, is ceremoniously buried in the king's throne room after Fortinbras successfully flees the room and the spirits of the dead are inhabiting it. A succubus is then seen to plot with the ghost of her former domineering partner, Hamlet.

All Photos by John Shufelt, Clackamas Print

Right: Horatio, played by Madelyn Marcotte, pins King Fortinbras in one fell swoop, administering his own brand of justice in one of the play's most dramatic scenes.

Below: Polonius, played by Derek Sweet, breaks his silence and pours forth his feelings on being dead and the nature of death itself.

Above: After a pleasurable night with the ghost of Ophelia, Fortinbras wakes up in excitement only to find Claudius and Gertrude praying over him, leaving him to wonder what happened to his intangible lover.