

Campus clubs plan events

Joshua Dillen The Clackamas Print

Associate Student Government hosts a monthly check-in to help clubs spread the word about their upcoming events. Lori Garrison, (shoulder length hair with CCC sweatshirt) the ASG Club Senator, leads the meeting in which the French Club, Phi Theta Kappa (honor society), Students for Life Club, Veterans Club and a new club called The Network all weigh in on their respective clubs. There are many more clubs on campus not represented at the meeting for this month. They also talked about their club fair that is coming up on Jan. 22 and 23 in the community center.

Every month ASG holds a club meeting for the clubs at Clackamas Community College to share what events they have planned and to help spread the word. CCC offers many clubs to join on campus ranging from French club to Veterans club. ASG also tries to use the clubs to help spread the word about what activities they are holding as well.

The meeting is called to order and the club department starts the meeting off with introductions. The main focus of the meeting was to discuss the upcoming club fair happening on Jan. 29 and 30. These meetings are supposed to help get the word out there about what new clubs are on campus. One new club that has not started yet is called The Network. While details are still in the works, the goal for the club is to help students with careers and helping students get through school. The Network will also help students share career stories and find out what jobs are available in the community.

Another subject on the agenda list was talking about Clackamas Community College turning 50 in 2016. Even though that seems like forever away, the anniversary of CCC is quickly approaching. ASG has been working hard to see what things they can do to help make the college a better place for everyone. On Jan. 22 and 23 from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., students interested in participating in the Imagine Clackamas survey received free pizza. If you are interested in looking at what clubs CCC offers, head to the ASG office for help.
