

BOSTON: Students help bigger community

This project is a large one and the students in the group are putting a lot of their personal time into making it happen. Why did they decide to do this project instead of something simpler?

"We originally wanted to put a solar panel ray on the house of a needy family, but then two weeks into the term the Boston Marathon event happened," said Matic.

"We basically saw that people needed help and funds, and we just changed our gears and put all the effort towards helping those people out."

He continued, "We are doing it to show national community and to show that even though Boston is on the other side of where we are, it's still our duty as a national community to help each other out."

Matic isn't the only student on the team that feels obligated to help beyond the local community. They all feel the same way, including Michael Malmberg.

"It's everyone's responsibility to help those in need," said Malmberg.

Other activities at the event will include a paddle race, live acoustic music, potato sack and egg spoon races for kids and blackjack for adults. The blackjack tables and hosts will be provided by Ubetcha Entertainment.

All of the proceeds are going to The One Fund Boston, in order to "raise money to help those families affected by the tragic events that unfolded during the Boston Marathon," according to the informational flier provided by The One Fund Boston.

This last Saturday, May 11, there was a run for Boston in St. Paul, Oregon. Proceeds will also be allocated through The One Fund Boston.

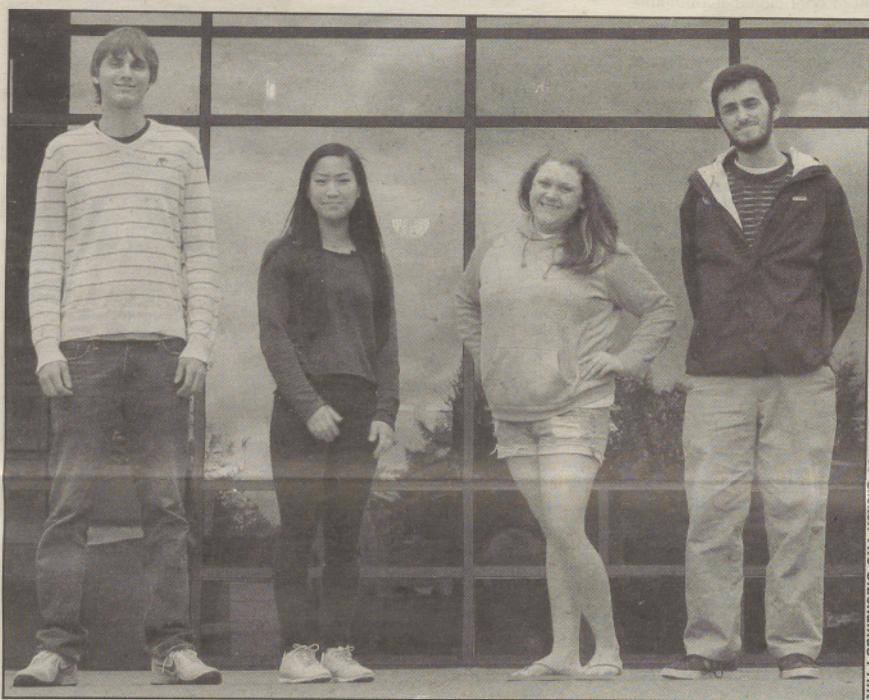

"We have kind of the same goal. Some people from our group are going to that to support it," said Matic.

If you'd like to have some family fun while also benefiting the community and supporting Clackamas students, head over to Gregory Forum this Saturday between 1 and 5 p.m.
